The HARDY FAMILY
of Andover - Notes-

Thomas (3) Hardy, son of Phineas (4), of Dublin, N.H., served in the Revolution. He was present when a traitor, or Tory, was shot, as a spy. He had tried to buy off Hardy, and win his help for an escape and had offered him a purse. When this was refused, he spurred his horse and dashed through the lines. Phineas and his men fired at both horse and rider until they floundered in a bog, where they sank, horse, rider, purse and all.

The Widow Hardy's reminiscences of her grand-father, Dr. William Hardy, included the tales of the trips the family made from the home of Sam in Lowell, to the Doctor's home in Poplin, N.H. The ride back and forth was made so frequently, that from "Lowell to Poplin" became a family slogan.

---

Sam (3) signed notes to aid his brother Wh. the doctor, and then when the notes became due, had to sacrifice his property in order to pay them. As a consequence, he died rather poor, although he had been considered a rich man, in Lowell.

In a note written July 4, 1901, the Widow Hardy told of the honeymoon trip of her daughter and son-in-law. They had gone to a summer hotel, Allenhurst N.H., and had reached there late in the afternoon. While dressing for dinner the fire alarm was sounded, and they dashed out to find the half of the hotel in flames. The fire raged until all the house was gutted and the bride's trousseau a total loss. Strangers took them in for the night, and they saved only what they were wearing.
The HARDY FAMILY
of Andover - Notes -

Next north of Jo. Bradley Pierson's place on the road from Boutwell's to Magetts Pond, is Henry Hardy, who got the house his father, Stephen, owned for a few years. This may be the HITCHCOCK place on the 1832 map. Ben Abbott had held the site for a while and later Silas Shedd owned it. When Hardy took it the soil was so poor that nothing would grow. He set out an orchard across the road from the front of the house in 1858, and in 1860 had a peach orchard on the north side, which flourished. He built the large barn all over in 1861. It stood sideways to the street before that.

In 1822 Micajah Hardy lived on the place that Sam Bailey built. He owned about 45 acres.

NORTH of the Kathridge Caffney group and the brick house, is the site of the home of John Hardy, in 1815. See 1830 map. Both he and his wife died there. His brother Micajah lived there a while and later John Webster got it and added a 2nd story.

The Alfred Hardy place was once owned by William Bailey and it stood north of the Joseph Bailey house built in 1850. Mr. Bailey sold to Capt. Sam'l Cochrane and his mother, the widow of James, bought or built a house for herself. I feel sure this Alfred Hardy place was occupied by N. Webster.

The heirs of John Hardy still keep the old place. John Hardy bought the property in 1856 after Friend Morse moved away, and m. Nov. 16, 1858, the widow of Levi York. James Cochrane and his widow, Salome, had in turn lived there, after James sold the place where Stephen Lovejoy lived in 1863. Orlando Lovejoy lived there next, and then Friend Morse. Whose illegal liquor selling from a fish cart, got him in trouble.
The red house where Stephen Hardy lived in 1864 was occupied later by his widow. She said it was built by her brother, Daniel Bailey, when he left the house on Ferry Lane. Daniel sold it to Jonathan Abbott who let it to Newdue Bailey, son of Dan. Next it went to Tom Shattuck, then to Orezio Bean and finally to Stephen Hardy, Jr. in 1858.

Artemas Kendall, brother-in-law of Stephen, built a home for himself and wife on part of Stephen's land, 1844. This land belonged at one time to Bradford people who sold the wood on it 60 years previously, and sold the land to Daniel Bailey.

Ezekiel Hardy lived on the road south of Haggetts Pond.

Simon Hardy and wife Mary came, on March 31, 1840, to the one story red house with two windows in roof, which had been occupied by Miles Flint, husband of Catherine Hardy, who had bought the place from Hobart Clark. Simon's folks were there in 1863.

Flint seems to have built the house where Wm. Hardy lived, in 1843. He lived there a while and then sold to Hardy, his brother-in-law. Flint then went to his other site, in 1847.
