Deborah Russe, who married an Indian of the Narragansett tribe,-- ALMONACH, called Peter Bridges, in ANDOVER,-- in an Indian camp accord-to tribal rites, had a daughter Eunice by him, before she left him and married JOHN HOYT. Eunice was placed in care of her aunt, wife of Thomas Blanchard. She later lived with Sgt. Nathan Abbott.

HOYT FAMILY

Three years after she deserted her Indian mate, Deborah had a daughter by John Hoyt, born 1769, in Tewksbury, whom she named Hannah. Hannah married Frederick Lowe or Lew, son of a colored woman, who kept a circus show, and had a son Frederick, born July 10, 1785.

Hannah later married Jesse Haggett ; joined church 1792; went to Ludlow, Vt. before 1812; and had 2 children. Jesse and Hannah Haggett-half brother and sister to mulatto Frederick Lew; and had an aunt Eunice,-said the tale,- who was an Indian-half sister to their mother, Hannah Russe; had a lot of cousins of all colors and strains.
