Thimble Club Celebrates Its First Anniversary

On Friday evening, February 12, the home of Mrs. William Clemons of Andover street was the scene of a pretty Valentine party and the celebration of the first anniversary of the Thimble Club. The activities of the evening opened with a delicious supper consisting of chicken pie, mashed potatoes, squash, celery, pickles, rolls, coffee and cake. A pretty Valentine basket filled with hearts acted as a place card and favor. The table was attractively decorated in Valentine colors and a beautiful birthday cake with one candle was used as the center piece.

Following the supper a short sketch entitled "Toast and Toastettes" written by Mrs. Edwin W. Brown, president of the organization, was given.

Representing the Toast, Mrs. Brown gave a brief history of the organization, saying in part:—To-night we are celebrating our first anniversary of the Thimble Club. This organization formed on the afternoon of February 12, 1931. Three ladies, namely, Mrs. William Matthews, Mrs. William Clemons and Mrs. George Mitchell, happened to call on Mrs. Edwin Brown and as each lady had brought her sewing along a delightful afternoon was spent. Tea was served by the hostess and a general discussion was in order as to why we could not meet once every week and as we were all interested in needlework, amid much joking we decided to call ourselves The Thimble Club. We met for several months on Thursday afternoon of each week and then as the idea became so popular among our friends we decided to increase our ranks to our present quota of ten members. We have met once in every two or three weeks, at a time convenient to the members and have spent many enjoyable as well as profitable hours together. We have among our group many proficient needlewomen and instructive and helpful ideas have been exchanged in hooked rug making, embroidery, knitting, quilting and also helpful household hints and beautifiers which have helped to make our organization a unit of profit.

The welfare of the children of our individual homes and also of the Community have proved interesting topics, especially the subjects of manners and health promotions and each member has left the meeting with a broader scope of the assets and liabilities that can be acquired through careful training. As you all know each member here has done her part in civics, helping the teachers and scholars of our local school during the past years, taking an active part in promoting spelling matches and other events of educational interest to the children, and aiding the movement whereby our children were transported to the Central Plant at Andover where they might receive the same educational advantages as the Andover pupils.

A social hour precedes each meeting, with a broader scope of the assets and liabilities that can be acquired through careful training. As you all know each member here has done her part in civics, helping the teachers and scholars of our local school during the past years, taking an active part in promoting spelling matches and other events of educational interest to the children, and aiding the movement whereby our children were transported to the Central Plant at Andover where they might receive the same educational advantages as the Andover pupils.

Show Interest in Frosted Foods

Housewives of Andover are showing considerable interest in the quick-frozen foods recently introduced here, according to Mr. J. Hromada, proprietor of Epicure Market at 4 Main street, who has the franchise to sell the foods which have been quick-frosted and packaged by the Birdseye Packing company. The Birdseye process of quick-frosting has been called one of the most revolutionary developments in the history of food. Its effects on the eating habits of mankind and on the distribution of foodstuffs are forecast as being similar in regard to food to the effects of the automobile on transportation. Scientists, business men, home economics experts and housewives have been tremendously interested, according to Mr. Hromada, in the Birdseye process, developed by Clarence Birdseye, a Massachusetts scientist who conceived the big idea while exploring in Labrador. He caught fish in the far north and the fish, when flipped into the 50-below-zero arctic air, froze instantly. Then, when it was thawed out, the taste was actually improved. These and other observations led to the discovery that the smaller the ice crystals formed in freezing, the less the damage to the cell structure of what was frozen.

"The flavor of the food is a revelation," says Mr. Hromada. "Peas, for example, ordinarily lose their fresh-picked flavor 36 hours after being picked. Birdseye peas are frosted immediately after being picked. They are as sweet and tender as any peas you ever picked from your own garden and have a lively green-pea color. These packaged meats, fruits and vegetables are economical because there is no waste. Every bit of food in the package is selected and is edible. Peas are shelled. Spinach is cleaned, ready for the kettle. All the bone, fat and trimmings are cut from the meat. Cooking is about the same as any food except that the meat takes a little longer if cooked when solidly frosted. Some of the vegetables cook quicker than the non-frosted kind—peas in seven minutes; spinach in ten. You don't have to defrost this food. Put it right into the pot, hard as ice—you'll be surprised."

Phillips Dramatists to Produce Show

The police constable in a small English town receives a telephone call; a voice tells him it is the residence of a well-to-do detective whose hobby is gardening. "Just listen," says the voice. The constable hears a gun shot and can get no answer to his cries. He breaks into the house with his nephew, a Scotland Yard detective. They find the owner of the house slumped over the telephone shot through the heart. Investigation shows everyone else in the house gone.

The solution of this mystery by the murdered man's nephew and his fiancée is the substance of the detective comedy which the Phillips Academy Dramatic Club will present tomorrow night as their annual winter production, A. A. Milne's "Perfect Alibi", for which the curtain will rise at George Washington Hall at 8:15 o'clock.

Tickets are on sale at the office of John H. Dye, at George Washington Hall, and may be ordered by telephone. The prices are 75c for floor and 50c for balcony seats.

The production is under the direction of Grenville Benedict of the English department. Mrs. Allan V. Heely is in charge of the costumes, and Allan V. Heely has assisted Mr. Benedict in the coaching of the play. "The Perfect Alibi" enjoyed a successful New York run three years ago.

Free Church Has "Lincoln Sunday"

Last Sunday was Lincoln Sunday at the Free church. The subject of the pastor's sermon was "Lessons from the Life of Abraham Lincoln." He said that the annual celebration of Lincoln's birthday is a developer of character. He used as the outline for his discourse the verse by Van Dyke, "Four things a man must learn to do:

"If he would make his record true;
"To think without confusion clearly;
"To love his fellow man sincerely;
"To act from honest motives purely;
"To trust in God and Heaven securely."

It being Christian Endeavor Sunday the members of the Christian Endeavor society attended in a body and sat in pews reserved for them in the front. They recited in concert the poem by Van Dyke.

The Christian Endeavor societies gave the bouquet of flowers for the communion table. At the evening service Bruce Valentine was the leader and John Gallagher reviewed a book by A. Douglas entitled "The Magnificent Obsession."

and neat. He was also careful of his rules of conduct.

George loved to play war. In his young years he was always playing soldiers with his playmates. He began his soldier life by the important duty of carrying a note from Governor Dinwiddie to a French officer in Pennsylvania. This journey was a long and dangerous one.

The first battle in which Washington took part was at a place called Great Meadows, the first battle of the French and Indian War. His soldiers were attacked by about a thousand French and Indians. George's men fought bravely but were forced to surrender. This was the first and last time Washington ever surrendered. Many great battles were fought in this war and it was at last ended when a treaty was signed with France in 1763.

There wasn't any fighting for George now but in a few years the colonies began to find fault with England for the heavy taxes they had to pay and they at last formed a Continental Congress so as to be more united against England. Everybody was talking about war and they began to get ready to fight, and when the British soldiers went to Lexington to arrest a couple of American leaders, the colonists had a fight with them. This was the Battle of Lexington and Concord, on April 19, 1775.

George got another chance at fighting, because Congress met again the next month and voted that George Washington was to be the General of the Continental Army. He had plenty of chances now to fight, for in July the new Congress declared the colonies free and independent and no longer belonging to England. Of course England wouldn't stand that and the next day the British forces under General Howe landed at Long Island and had a severe battle with Washington's troops. The American army was only about half as strong as the British forces and Washington lost so many men it looked very bad for the colonies, but he saved them and fooled the British by leaving his camp fires all burning and took his whole army across the river on a foggy night and landed on the New York side. Both armies wanted to hold New York City and in the next couple of months the big battles of Harlem and White Plains were fought but Washington saw he could not hold New York so he retreated and left the city to General Howe.

The colonists were pleased with their

Hindus Coming to Andover

The Czar the new government aims to uproot the peasant village. Stalin called it in 1930, "The Great Break." The free farmer must be sacrificed to the collective farm called the "Kolkhoz." All well to do farmers who acquired wealth in produce or live stock and who were ambitious to prosper were called "Koolacks" viz. grasping with the fist. These "Koolacks" numbered about four or five million out of one hundred million. They stood in the way of the "Kolkhoz" collective farm.

"The Great Break," the grand decree of Moscow, resulted in the confiscation of their homes, lands and live stock and drove them as exiles into Siberia. The "Kolkhoz" then took possession of their lands and goods. This order was defended on the grounds that the "Muzhiks", well to do farmers, offered passive resistance and were defeating the soviet plan of collective farms.

Right into Hamlets

Hindus takes you to the little villages of Russia especially the small agricultural hamlet of his birthplace and boyhood days. You listen to the conversation of the natives. The majority seem to favor the great break with the past. There are bitter protests, however from the older generation.

The Russian farmer isolated from urban civilization, chained for centuries to an old order of things, unaccustomed to sudden changes, and stolidly static now faces a new life. Fundamentals are uprooted. He must renounce God, church, and the sacred law of private possession to be among the favored. The mastery of complicated machinery is essential to his success. The great movements of the ages as, the Renaissance, the Reformation and the Industrial Revolution took many decades or even centuries to develop. The Russian government expects to accomplish in five years the collectivist movement in rural Russia.

Mr. Hindus in his chapter, "Roscow Marches On" states his reaction to this drastic plan in the following passage: "When one sees in Moscow's streets the multitudes waiting in queues for food, the spell cast by Revolutionary rhetoric fades, and one faces the sinister force behind it—the brutal intolerance of differing opinions that have banished hundreds of honest doubters and non-conformists to far away parts of the land, or to fates even worse. The bright promise of tomorrow fails to lighten the gloom of to-day, as one asks himself again and again, why this haste? Why the five-year plan in four? Why not in six, in seven, in ten? "What nation had ever sought to achieve so ambitious a program under such crucial circumstances in so short a time? Why this relentless drive of a people who never had known speed, who are only now discovering the machine, and who need time to familiarize themselves with it and to attain mastery over its intricate workings? Why not a more leisurely pace, instead of this breath-taking forced march to the socialist land of promise?"

Tried to Find Answers

In 1930 the author tried to find the answer to these questions by conversation with the enlightened of Russia. The best explanation he could find was that there was grave danger to the success of this bold plan through a world boycott of Russia. The plan to succeed must have American material help especially engineers and machinery. Boycotts have a new significance in the world as shown in the Sino-Japanese conflict. This last trip after a period of absence of five years from Russia Mr. Hindus devoted to the observation of the plans of the Soviet in the great plains of farmlands.

Born in the heart of the great central plain the author reveals his love and affection for the peasantry. One of them by birth and sympathy he was able to reach their inner souls and search out the bitter truth of their longings and sufferings. He pictures the emotions of the heart which come to one who after long absence since childhood returns to the little rural hamlet. Its old haunts and familiar folk have been caught in the turmoil of this "Great Break".

What is the outcome? Some Americans are in sympathy with this human battle. Enlightened interest or curiosity should be indifferent. Failure of the experiment must mean a more terrible revolution and success, even though gradual, will leave its mark on western civilization. We cannot remain untouched if the fundamentals of our heritage are overturned in Soviet Russia. Enlightened interest or curiosity should suffice to call forth our attendance at Mr. Hindus' lecture. He has few rivals in the art of earnest and dramatic oratorical appeal. We look forward to what he may say about the human drama in the great spaces where east and west have no boundary line.

Sunday Sermons

REV. NEWMAN MATTHEWS, WEST PARISH CHURCH

Theme: Our Debt to Great Men.

The good possible to us in life comes from different sources. No inconsiderable part of it comes to us from the past through the social environment in which we live. The advantages and privileges we inherit have been handed down to us largely through the labors and struggle of great men. Here is one of the most significant facts about our life. No full and satisfactory judgment about life can be formed without taking this fact into consideration. It was the truth emphasized in the sermon. Illustration of it is found in every field of life. It seen on the material side in the almost innumerable facilities and conveniences of life which we have inherited. How much we owe to the inventive genius of Edison and Marconi in our own time! What new privilege has been opened up to us unknown to those who have gone before! Their inventive genius will enrich the life of all later generations. It reminds us of the whole field of scientific discovery and the use we are able to make of it all. We owe it to great minds. It is seen again in literature. Our American literature has greatly enriched the thought and life of the American people and of other peoples. All the great literature of the past is available to us. What a debt we owe the authors of it!

In the field of the state and statesmanship we think of Washington in this bicentennial year of his birth. No one probably would deny that the founding of a new nation in America, however radical his views about our system of government, was a great and beneficent achievement. There were many leaders in that achievement, but among them Washington was chief. "It was chiefly through his genius that the Colonies became the United States," says Professor Thayer. In the field of religion, for us Jesus is the supreme illustration. A host of other noble spirits have preserved the work of Jesus and passed it down through the centuries. Life is what it is largely through the labors of great men. In this time of trial when we see the defects of our system, it is well for us to be reminded of the good which has come down unchanged and undiminished from the past.

REV. MARION R. PHELPS BALLARDVALE

Theme: "Symbols of Greatness and Power."

Sometimes it is the lightning's swift flash which reveals to us hidden objects. Quite as similar a vision of truth sets one's mind ablaze. Edwin Markham has given us an enlightening illumination of Lincoln.

Markham is one of those mystic poets of unusual vision who see God's purpose in the universe. He sees the mounts clothed in purple, as symbols of eternity. The mountains and the seas symbolize more than any other features of the earth its greatness and power. With this in mind Markham flashes out the vivid illumination of the character of Lincoln.

"Here was a man to hold against the world. A man to match the mountains and the sea."

God in His majesty and power can make mountains and seas, but he can also make a man to match them. When the Union was in the throes of seeming destruction Lincoln believed his cause true and just. He faced the world with that belief.

We need more men who can "Match the Mountains and the Seas". Walter Reed is another shining example. A man who worked in the Tropics trying to combat the yellow fever. Reed allowed one of the insects to bite him, he was deathly sick, but recovered. Here was a man to match the mountains.

Our age in America is one of business and commerce. We find mountain peak men among the financiers; men who are tall not because of material alone but because of a noble character. We need economic pioneers who will venture forth into new ways. We need men who will go forth beyond everything yet done.

The Bible has given us great men. Moses, Isaiah, Job, Prophets. Men of God who devoted themselves to leading the people to a higher conception of God. High above the rest is Jesus, the Son of God, giving His life to win a world to God, giving His all even to death upon the cross.

When we examine the lives of great men and women we find two notable characteristics. First each had a goal in life, a high purpose. Each of them had a deep courage. We need courage in times like these. It is necessary if we would make our lives count for most in making a better world.

May your life be worthy of an epitaph such as this:

"Here was a man to hold against the world. A man to match the mountains and the sea."

Agricultural Economics. Some perishable products are hauled by truck as far as 600 or 800 miles in one or two days. As a general rule, it does not pay the farmer to haul produce with his own truck for distances of more than 75 miles, says the bureau. Most farmers who ship perishables farther than this find more profitable to sell the produce to men who operate trucks, pay truckmen to haul it, let truckmen handle it for a commission.
