Seventy-Six Diplomas Given at High School Graduation

Honor Essayists Prove up to Usual Standards—Subjects Chosen from Pioneer America—Annual Prize Awards Made and Class Gift Presented

Local High School Enjoys Class Day

The graduating class of Punchedard high school held its annual class day Wednesday afternoon presenting the usual amount of more or less hints and humorous remarks, but in a setting more unusual than has ever been presented at Punchedard. The seniors were seated in front of the bleachers on the playground in the midst of a small forest of leafy trees, shrubs, and greenery. In front of them was an arbor through which the speakers walked to an imitation microphone. Into this President Charles Armitage, after delivering a few words of welcome to the large number of parents, friends, and school mates present.

Principal Nathan C. Hamblin made the presentations to the prize winners. Two prizes for first year Latin, the gift of Rev. F. R. Shipman, D.D., the first of ten dollars and the second of six dollars, were awarded to Gwen Armitage and Helen Hardy respectively. The M. E. Gutterston Botanical Prize was awarded to Thelma Beck '34 and Norma Molloy '32. Miss Beck won the first prize of five dollars, while Miss Molloy received three dollars for second prize. The Parker Prize of ten dollars, the gift of Carl Rust Parker of the class of 1900, awarded to the boy in the senior class who has won his letter in two sports and stands highest in scholarship, was given to Walter Pearson. The Doctor Conroy Prizes, each of five dollars, went to Avedis Sarabogiosian for freshman improvement and to Barbara Hammond for the best Senior Extempore Essay. William H. Foster, Jr., was presented the Moderator Prize of ten dollars established by Dr. Stearns for exemplary school citizenship. A five-dollar certificate was awarded to Philip Bliss '33 for excellence in the study of the Constitution of the United States. This is the prize given by the local post No. 8 of the American Legion. The Harvard club prizes, awarded to the boy in the college preparatory curriculum of the Junior class with highest scholarship marks, was presented to Robert Nicholl. The book given this year was "The Epic of America" by James Truslow Adams. The Shawshen Women's Club Prize of $2.50 for an essay on the character of the faculty and George T. Eaton, statistical secretary, presented to Robert Cowen of the sophomore class.

Charles Armitage, president of the graduating class, presented the annual class gift, a sum of money. Alan Milnes, president of the junior class accepted it with a few appropriate remarks.

At the final morning assembly at Stowe school Wednesday morning one hundred school letters were presented to pupils. This event is one which excites keen interest. It means much to receive one's "S."

Awards were made first for high scholarship, a yearly average of eighty-five per cent or above. Seventeen were received by pupils in grade eight. Those above 90 percent were: Esther Francis, 100 (A in all subjects); Katherine McGilpin, 98; Isabel MacLaren, 97; James Gillespie, 97; and Doris Goff, 93.

In grade seven thirty-seven were presented to pupils whose averages for the year were 85 percent or over. Four won "A" rank in all major subjects, as follows: Ruth Armitage, 99; Wayne Anderson, 99; Barbara Sellars, 98; and Andrew Innes, 98.

Records also above 90 percent were: Ruth Hardy, 96; Margaret Dooley, 95; Edward Anderson, 94; Edward Chervier, 93; Mary Simone, 92; Everett Gorrie, 92; Roberta Brickett, 91; Lucy Beck, 91; Ruth Hackney, 91; Helen Goff, 90; Thomas Wallace, 90.

Participation in the operation of the school is recognized. Pupils who serve as members of the Student's Council, as patrol in the building when classes change rooms, or as safety officers on school grounds and at street crossings, people who care for the school flag—these and other things make it possible for a student who cannot win high honors in academic work to earn his school letter in some other way.

In grade eight 20 pupils had perfect attendance for the year. In grade seven 18 were also perfect in attendance.

Alumni Ass'n of Academy Has Election

Son of Theodore Roosevelt Is Chosen President—Tariff Commissioner Speaks

Archibald Roosevelt, a member of the class of 1913 and youngest son of the late Theodore Roosevelt, was elected president of the Phillips Academy Alumni association at its annual meeting held last Friday in the Borden gymnasium.

The other officers chosen were: Vice-presidents, Edward A. Ford, '82, of Tibhodes, La.; Charles F. Sawyer, '87, of Dalton; Frederick S. Fales, '92, of New York; Conners B. Woolsey, '97, of Aiken, S. C.; Ronald Keeney, '02, of Somersville, Conn.; Bernard E. Keilly, '07, of St. Joseph, Mo.; Donald D. Milne, '12, of Philadelphia; statistical secretary, George T. Eaton, '73, of Andover; secretary, Frederick E. Newton, '93, of Andover; treasurer, George F. French, '97, of Andover.

Philip R. Allen, '92, of Walpole presided at the alumni dinner. Seated at the head table beside Mr. Allen were: Alfred L. Ripley of Andover, a member of the board of trustees and former chairman of the board, Prof. James Hardy Rogers of the trustees, Acting Headmaster Charles H. Forbes, Dr. Claude M. Fuess of the faculty and George T. Eaton, statistical secretary, President Horace W. Davis of the class of 1932, Rev. Frederick C. Wilson, '12, of Ipswich, Prof. George H. Nettleton, '92, of New Haven, and Robert Lincoln O'Brien, chairman of the National Tariff Commission.

Mr. O'Brien was the feature speaker of the afternoon, speaking on present day tariff conditions. The speeches follow:

Introductory Remarks by Presiding Officer Philip R. Allen

Now, friends of Phillips Academy, Andover—that is an all-inclusive term and it is the easiest way to start, but I am going beyond that today and as the representative of this great body of alumni I am going to send greetings to the gallery goddesses (applause), especially to the charming daughters of the class of 1892, who I am sure are in the gallery. And then I bring the greetings of the alumni to our honored guests—to our honored head master today, Charlie Forbes. I was about to forget our perfectly friendly and the head master of Estey, Lewis Perry, who is so modest today that he refused to come up here, preferring to sit with the ignominious crowd below among his dear classmates. (Applause.) I cannot even ask him to stand up, because later I am going to get him up here. And then to the faculty, and then to the group of—'I was going to say undergraduates, but I understand that 12 o'clock today they became graduates. I feel like a man—but I am not going to tell you about it—I am reminded of that other man that is so well—I think he has recently been called "The forgotten man," so we will leave him. I might tell you, as I have heard so many hundred times, "Unaccommodated as I am to speaking," but it would be a darned lie. I love to talk. (Laughter.) And I do talk whenever I am asked to talk or allowed to. I might also take a minute to explain or apologize as to why I am here, but it is dear old Pap Eaton saying, "You are coming back to your fortieth reunion anyway"—I was complimented to think he knew I would come back—but he said, "We would like to get you to allow your name to be used as president of the association," assuring me at the same time that there was nothing to do, no duties to perform, no meetings of any committee, but simply to preside at this dinner. I accepted with alacrity, because I have been on so many committees and here was had to go to so many meetings and here was the one since and I was to be called today. But why did he pick on Allen? I know he knows everybody in the class, all classes, but he remembered especially the class of 1892 and as he went down the list he said he had never seen such a class before. It could not choose the man, there were so many great men in the class. He worked on it probably for an hour or two, and then said, "Why, heck, I can't do it; I'll take the first man"—and his name began with "A." (Laughter.)

These notes are simply to keep me from making a speech. They might be a little reservation notes. I hope you will have a had—and of course I hope you will have a had—

Committee Has $2500 on Hand and Pledges of $1500—Academy Votes to Spend $5000 for Work in Conjunction with Committee

The unemployment situation in Andover was brightened up considerably during the past week when work was given to a total of 74 men. The same number will be employed next week, and according to present indications money enough will be available to carry through to October. The first payroll will be at 10.30 tomorrow, with Town Treasurer Thaxter Eaton handing out the wages to all those who bring their blue cards. Mr. Eaton is an active participant in the Emergency committee's work, having been appointed to act as assistant treasurer during the summer months in the absence of Dr. Claude M. Fuess.

Golden Wedding at Abbot Homestead

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. James J. Abbott occurred Wednesday evening when 75 of their relatives, friends and neighbors gathered in the old Abbot homestead to extend felicitations. The old house, where Mr. and Mrs. Abbott started house-keeping fifty years ago, was a unique and attractive setting for the receiving couple. Mrs. Abbott in her old-fashioned wedding gown bearing a strong resemblance to the pictures in Godey's Lady's Book. The wedding dress was originally worn by her mother the late Mrs. Charles C. Blount in 1857.

Four of Mr. and Mrs. Abbott's six children were present. Lucy from Connecticut, Josephine, now Mrs. Arthur C. Varum, from New Hampshire, Chester and Elizabeth, Mrs. M. Everett Collins of Andover, James in California and Paul in Michigan were unable to come.

A humorous poem, depicting the close association of the Shawshen river and the Abbott family, was read by the Rev. Frank R. Shipman.

The old Abbot homestead, built in 1685, is now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Abbott's oldest son, Chester and his family. It is said to be the only house in the country where the descendants to the eighth generation of the original family are now living.

A Good Way to Help

The response to the odd job appeal of the Andover Emergency committee has been far below expectations. Some 2400 letters have been sent out to home owners suggesting that they check up on their property in order to ascertain if there is any work that might be done, but so far the replies have been few and far between.

The emergency committee is facing an exceedingly difficult task in raising enough funds to keep the most needy people employed. It was reported Tuesday evening that with the present funds work could be gotten out until next October, but this is no reason why the townspeople should cease their endeavors to help. Conditions may be getting worse while we are patting ourselves on the back.

Every odd job given by a home owner means a corresponding reduction in the need for funds. The committee's letter contained a list of jobs that could be done around the house, and it is suggested that this list be examined closely by the property holder who really wishes to help. There certainly must be many improvements that could be made on one's grounds or in the house, and now is the time to have this work done. Building material is cheaper now than it has been for some time, the cost of labor is less, and most important of all, every job will be a great help to some one in need.

Editorial Cinders

Coming at a time when most educational institutions have been hard hit, the town can well appreciate the offer of Phillips academy to spend $5000 in conjunction with the emergency committee. Co-operation such as this is what is needed today. The academy's building program in the past decade has kept many Andover men at work, but with the completion of the chapel construction activities ceased on the Hill. However, the school has been employing men during the spring for work on the grounds, and has made an effort to help the unemployment situation by staggering the available work. The further expenditure of $5000 should make Andover feel even more proud of its famous academy.

The local post of the American Legion has been doing its part in the relief campaign. If the unit continues to make donations to the fund, it will soon have given as much as the town appropriated for its quarters last March. The boys are to be congratulated for their splendid work, and it is hoped that their unselfish spirit will serve as an example to the other organizations in town.

How to pay for things you don't need with money you haven't got—that's the neat little problem bequeathed to the people of Massachusetts by the Legislature.—"Banker and Tradesman" explained that if the men worked for that pay, the other union men would be jeopardized. It was suggested that the union men be given the ordinary rough work and that the skilled work be given the non-union men. For plumbing work a master will be given several unskilled assistants.

Mr. Berry and Mr. Gillard reported that the workers were in general pretty good. A discussion of "gold-brickers," also known as loafers, took place, and it was decided that if anyone were found gold bricking, he should be reported and another man should be given the job. This does not mean that the men will be worked to death, however, since the committee felt that the men should be given a rest once in a while if unaccustomed to the hard work given them.

William A. Doherty of the school committee reported that the sub-committee on buildings and grounds was considering laying ashes near at the Central schools. The Emergency committee will provide the labor and the money for the labor provided that the school board pays for the ashes which in Mr. Gillard's opinion would cost $100. The school board has ashes which it could use, but the $100 is an additional amount needed. The school committee will take up this matter Monday evening.

Mr. Hulme suggested that contact be made with owners of wood lots to see if they would agree to allow their wood to be cleared for the taking away. This could be used for fuel in the winter. Mr. Gillard reported that he had some wood at Haggatt's pond belonging to the town. It was suggested that this be sold to anyone who wishes to buy, and the funds could be used for work.

The question of employment of women was also taken up and it was decided that the committee should make the necessary funds available for sewing and dressmaking work.

Mr. Curtis mentioned that twenty-five towns were giving forty cents an hour for work and in some of the larger cities only 33 1-3 cents was paid for labor. It was also reported that a private fence concern doing work in this town paid twenty-five cents a hole, and it took two hours per hole.

The next meeting of the committee will be July 5.

A cordial invitation to take part in an exhibition of work of local artists, is extended to residents of Andover, North Andover, Lawrence and Methuen, to be held at the Addison Gallery, Phillips academy, Andover, from the 10th of July until the middle of August. The exhibition will include paintings in oil and water color, drawings, prints and sculpture. The exhibition is not limited to professional artists, and it is hoped that all those who have done creative work in the above mentioned mediums will submit examples for consideration.

The requirements of the exhibition are as follows:

1. All work should be delivered to the Addison Gallery by July 1 for the consideration of the committee on selection.
2. Paintings and water colors should be framed; simple, inexpensive frames will be perfectly satisfactory. Drawings and prints may be unframed, but should, if possible, be mounted on standard size mats, 14 1-4 by 19 1-4, or 20 by 24. This exhibition is under the direction of the committees in charge and is sponsored as a cooperative enterprise of the people in this vicinity who are interested in creative art.

While most of the speakers have been mulling over their thoughts, I have eaten cum menti sano, taking my otiium cum dignitate. Of course you fellows who don't remember your classics may not get that and I will have to translate it—and a free translation, surrounded as I am by classicists here at the tables: "Calmly eating in a dignified manner."

Now you cannot expect me, after hearing Professor Babbitt this morning, for a fellow who belongs to the Paper Makers' Union all the rest of the time except when he happens to be presiding at a dinner like this, to come up here and not be saturated with the atmosphere of the classics. So I'll digress and put in a little Latin once in a while, you will forgive me. I know I shouldn't do it, because I know how few of you remember your Latin.

All the speakers today happen to be good friends of mine, and that is the reason why I am not going to make any speech, because so many presiding officers tell those stories and tell those things which the speakers have been thinking about so long that it puts them in a very difficult situation. I had nothing to do with the choice. Pap Eaton said, "You have nothing to do except to preside, and do as little of that as possible." So I shall do as little as possible. But before we come to the speaker's list I do feel like saying the class of '92 along with Mr. Allen. Forty years ago we graduated from Andover with the modest motto "Virtute volumus." Some of us at that time translated "Virtus" as "virtue." They were largely members of the Society of Equity. Others of us translated it as "virility." The latter was a larger and a very considerable number of our class wisely decided not to attempt any translation whatsoever. But we all agreed that "We prevailed," whether virtuously or otherwise, for it was not a matter of common knowledge that we were the greatest class that ever graduated from this great school. (Applause; cheers from members of the class of 1892.) And was it not recognized by Professor Coy and Professor Comstock—to us in those days "the glory that was Greece and the gaiter that was Rome"—who decided to leave Andover with the class of 1892 to found a new school, calling it the "Academy of Virtue and Honor" and were not the athletic soothsayers already saying that the god of battles, who for three or four years had been wisely siding with Andover so as to be on the winning side, was about to desert and go over to the Phrygians, for three successive years, and it was not merely the loss of that athletic prestige but that rare burst of creative lyric genius that accompanied our athletics. Shall we ever forget that Exeter game in which eventually we were leading with a score of 26 to 4 and with that minor creative impulse which always characterized the highest moment of our class, we burst into:

"What's the score? What's the score? Andover twenty-six, Exeter four!"

And then when in the remaining moments Exeter by some inadvertence scored an extra touchdown, we instantly changed the wachcry to:

"We are the men, we are the men! Andover twenty-six, Exeter four!"

That was forty years ago. "Wait till we come to forty years," Zachary counseled. '92 has waited. Our Latin has rusted. "Virtute volumus." We begin to detect a note of questioning in that old confident assertion. Much virtue in we—of '92? Possibly, but more virtue, we now suspect, in Andover. We realize now that the greatest class of Andover since our day, was another class and our school days that great triumvirate, unique in having no weakling in its membership—the treasurer, Jim Sawyer; the generous and beneficent donor, Tom Cochran; and the prince of headmasters, Al Stearns. (Applause.)

In the old days, at least before 1929, perhaps our commonest American question about an individual was "What is he worth?" Our Government had taught us in the days when it paid a government to investigate income returns, to answer in terms of dollars and cents. We of '92 came back and we marvel at the magnificent development of Andover since our day. We rejoice in the manifest evidences of the tremendous material resources of Andover; her endowments, her buildings, the matchless beauty of her new campus. But if you ask us of '92, "What is Andover worth now?" we shall answer variously, perhaps in another class and in dollars and cents. We of '92 know more of Andover's outgo than of her income, more of her generous spirit of spending and being spent in service than of her actual expenditures; more of her intangible assets and traditions than of any inventory. We know that Andover is a great endowed school, but we think of its endowments in terms of faculty and students, of personality and character, in the maintenance of the same traditions.

And so really to us of '92, it is not these incredible changes that most impress us, but the enduring consistency of the essential spiritual inheritance of Andover. We of the college think that well—all of the colleges, and Yale not least. In times of war we knew the service of Andover men. And as I left New Haven I came through our memorial hall where are the tablets of the men in war service, and nearby a tablet to an Andover man who gave his life after the war—a Yale sophomore, Allen Keith, who gave his life in the fire at a movie theatre in New Haven. He might have escaped with the first. He stayed to rescue the women and children. And when his mother arrived at Yale, she found him in his life still lingered, as he lay in the hospital his words to her, simple but proud, were: "Mother, I think I was the last fellow out." The next week, when his Yale society elections came out, there was the name of Allen Keith, "honoris causa." So shall one ever come from the grave and attain the dream you cherish and missed and might have known.

We of the colleges know the worst of Andover men. This meeting today is in a high sense a service of consecration. It is a moment of communion with the past whose inheritance we have with the present in which we take just pride; with the future, whose shrewd prophets we may become.

"Enough! Our praise rings empty and uncouth, In vain the curling incense wreaths arise From the unkindled altars of our youth If our hearts bleed not at the sacrifice. A tinsel pageant this a puppet motion Save as the wind the smoke of self-deception Reconstitute our lives to light and truth." (Applause.)

President Allen When Alfred Stearns was compelled to go away for a few months of recuperation his old rearing Charles Forbes took his place as acting headmaster. Since coming to Andover I have had so many tributes from the boys, from the faculty, about the outstanding job Charlie Forbes has done, that I decided I would do something different during this momentary holding of the authority today in Andover. I am sure Alfred Stearns would be the first to approve what I am now about to do. Charlie Forbes has had many degrees from various colleges, but he has never had a degree from the alumni of Phillips Academy, Andover. I think that is true. And so, by the authority that is vested in me—possibly a little of it usurped—I am now going to present Charles H. Forbes for a degree. Usually you have, I think, two people, one to do the presenting, the other to do the conferring. I am going to do both. And only with I had the sword that I saw one of the young men have last night in that "Green Goddess" entertainment. By the way, I want Jack Fuess to answer this question—I wish Professor Babbitt was here, because I would like to ask him if he didn't think that was a pretty good line of mine, that line of alliteration, "Greetings to the gallery goddesses." I would like to ask Professor Babbitt if that is not a good piece of alliteration. I would like to ask Professor Babbitt one other question—he is not here, perchance—I would like to ask him what humanism is. (Laughter and applause.) I am going to find out some time. I have got that intellectual curiosity that I am going to find out some time.

I cannot tell you what a peculiar pleasure it gives me—I know you would all like to have the same chance I have got. I wish this was parchment and an illuminated scroll instead of my own handwriting. I want to call your attention—this was all done before I heard Professor Babbitt—I am going to present for a degree Charles H. Forbes, degree Doctor of Human Understanding. Now comes the little classic: (Applause, all rising.)

Remarks of Professor Charles H. Forbes Mr. President, sons of Andover, wives and daughters of Andover: One never receives a degree without an overflow of emotion, and for this supreme degree from the supreme authority I am most deeply moved, sir. I feel prouder than any of these college degrees that all you fellows have from the highest authority I now have the degree of Human Understanding. I am so glad they put it down for the under-standing—I have to carry so much above it. (Laughter.) I am put in mind by the call of this inexorable judge—for this is an alumni gathering and has not anything to do with my official business—of an incident that occurred in Italy not long ago. A new film was to be produced and Mussolini had been requested to appear in it. He gave his consent and did appear. On the opening night when the film was to be exhibited the hall was packed and at that moment a man came in and sat in the last seat. The film went on and it reached the point where the picture of Mussolini appeared, and everybody rose except the man who had last come in. In horror a man in front of him turned around and said, "That is the way we all feel, but you better get up, or he'll get up and kick you." Mussolini. (Renewed laughter.) I would prefer to sit and talk of the food spiritual as we have partaken of the food material, but this inexorable giver of degrees has insisted that I should help on his show. And so, unwilling as I was, with faith unfaithful and a heavy heart, I shall attempt to bore you for a few moments.

That "faith unfaithful, falsely true" is one of the favorite figures of oxymoron. You know what oxymoron is—an incongruous confusion of terms. But a student gave a beautiful definition when asked in the class, "What is oxymoron?" He said, "It is one of those darned chemical compounds of oxygen."

The position of an under-study is a precarious one. When one takes a step he must tread softly lest the blind mole may hear a footfall. When he is driving a car he must drive over an established road marked with signs of "Stop" and "Go," and he cannot be color blind. I have tried with the help of all those whom you see here, and have kept the car on the established highway and made only occasional stops to mend tiny holes in the road. I have kept in the middle of the road so far as the law would allow. That is the doctrine of my good old friend the Roman Horace, as well as the injunction of tact and good sense and I have been enabled to land the freight, as you have seen in the southeast corner, in good and healthy condition. We have given them all that we could. We have given them everything except Al—and we spell that A-I-I. With the help of all of these we have produced all of those. And while you fellows of '92 represent to us those who know you all that Andover could be in your day, they represent of that Andover is today and we are proud of them, and you may be assured that whatever right ideas they had for Andover, they too have high ideals, they too represent all the best that you ever can meet with in Italy. I remember once standing looking at Trajan's column and two men came along, one a 100 per cent American of the finest type—of the 100 per cent—the other who loved art. Is my opposition unseemly? The friend of art was explaining the wonderful carvings down the column and his friend was looking over the column. He turned to the American and said, "Isn't that detail magnificent?" "Yeah, I getcha. Kinder needs a vacuum cleaner, don't it? Say, where can I get a good cigar in this burg?" I was in the Louvre once to see whether Mona Lisa that morning was agreeable and seductive or whether she was seductive and shrewd. And the crowd came in and my countryman—"Tis of Thee I Sing"—and in the rear a lanky and long fellow stood, his head protruding above his fellows, and he looked down this magnificent hall, as the (Continued from page 3) guide said, fifteen or sixteen hundred feet long, and the fellow said, "Whew! Gee, if I had my bicycle I could do that in five minutes!" And he was the only honest man there. (Laughter.) The rest of them took twenty minutes.

It was in the Luxembourg long years ago, in the 90's that I saw an old lady and her daughter and they had then a Baede er that was out of date. The dear lady was looking for Whistler's Mother. But Whistler's Mother had been promoted and in the place of that number that indicated her presence was hung the "Olympia of Manet." This was before Manet had received the stamp of approval. Perhaps some of you do not recall the Olympia. It is a huge canvas; a female figure resting on a couch, clothed only in the light, and I must say, not the light of simplicity. The dear old lady looked at it. "385? Yes, 385. Is that Whistler's Mother?" Well, she turned to the young man and said, "Well, I suppose it is all right; it was his Mother." (Laughter.) Perhaps not intelligent criticism, but certainly a lesson in kindness of spirit.

And that would lead to one of the functions of education, and one of its greatest functions, to see that the number is right before you go ahead. The finding out of fact is one of the basic functions still of an education. There are those who speak little of it. We hear much of interest, of fascination, of whiling away the time in pleasant and agreeable ways. But after all, the main thing which we must find is something on which we may not merely find idle pleasure, but something on which we can in the simple following of the cattle find something as a cud to chew on, something on which we can reflect and in the hurry and rush of our crowded curricula we are not leaving time enough for chewing the cud—for finding out what is in what we have been through and correlating it with what else we have learned. We are building up a series of rooms and at present those who are thinking of the progress of education are unwilling that we should be cabined and confined in separate rooms. We have now the inhabitants who know their own chamber, but who are at a loss when they are let loose in the great hall of learning. We have birds of a feather who must flock together because when they do not they are bored one into the other.

Now here must be some way in which we can break through the neighboring rooms and have free passage, some way in which we can have some appreciation of the other fellow's work and balance and connect it, and so bring it to a form by which we may digest what we have done in our separate chambers and make them one common food for one common person and develop out of them some intelligence of relative importance. I do not mean that we should make a newspaper out of it, but I think if Mr. O'Brien was running it he would find some way in which column two might correlate with column three, and I am sure the editorial page would correlate them all. And the central mind of the boy who is to be cultivated ought to be that editorial column where he can speak and understand the language in the other column. The effort which you have to make is to find out more specifically what our boys are like—to find out their aptitudes. Oh, we know them now. The trouble is, we do not do anything with our knowledge. We still drive on the fellows that are not fit for the line on which they are heading, and keep them at what they cannot do. The finding of adaptabilities is not the finding of the mere whims and changes of an ignorant youth, but it is the finding through proper testings in the work of different subjects, those that can do them, and then with what wisdom we have, use that power because we believe that if the subject which they can do they will eventually find something for their upbuilding and growth that is worth while, but to hammer away at fellows who cannot do without stumbling, without falling, the subjects assigned, is the stupidity of education.

Now we want to do something of that kind in the future. After decent tests and the acquired knowledge of what a student can do, set him on a line in which he will not find ease and the least resistance, but will be able to do the work that shall be set before him. Power is what he wants; power directed along proper lines. We are not doing and no school is doing, or very few schools of small numbers, what we all should do for the bright boy. We all know—of course all you bright fellows trying to get something that you did not know when you came in. Now ordinarily the bright fellow knows of the assignment that he has to do, practically all that there is in the hour of recitation, because the teacher has a terrible job set before him. He must take the superintendent, to the middle class and to the poor fellows who need a lot of time to make the pace, to make the course in the pace.

Now it is wrong to let the brilliant fellow have an over-supply of leisure time. With us he has to be there 50 minutes, and lucky is the teacher who can find the opportunity to give him something that will keep him busy while he is traveling at the middle pace. And the poor fellow down below is getting 50 per cent of what is being required, to say nothing of beyond. Those two extremes must be better treated in the future. We must find ways of giving the top fellows their heads and we must find ways of keeping the lower fellows at their best pace without shame. We do not need much change for the middle man, and he is the great body. He is getting the cream of the course, because the pace is suited to him and he is kept on a stretch. That is what we are looking for and hoping for in our educational advantages here. And I am sure that the colleges are now open-minded on the evidence of progressive strength and assertion on the part of the secondary school to welcome those who may not have some of the heretofore set subjects but who come with a better knowledge, a better frame of mind, better prepared to carry on any college course.

We want to make men out of our men; we want to make culture out of the possibilities of its various phases. We can do it best by giving the best opportunity to advance to each one of them.

I was glad when the president of the trustees spoke about living, rather than preparing to live. There is a better phase of life, as you all know, because you are living it again today, than the phase which those fellows have just finished. Preparing for what? Who knows what they are preparing for? Living today, doing today, making the most out of life as it is. That is what we tell these fellows, and they seem to be doing a pretty good job of it. They are living. They are not preparing for a mysterious or a vaporous metamorphosis somewhere in the future. They are not cocoons to turn into bright butterflies. They are butterflies now—only they are not ephemeral butterflies. (Applause.)

You sons and friends of Andover, come back once more. You come back to your early butterfly existence and I know from what I have seen last night and today that as it always, you are young again. The Master himself has said, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." And I hope it is not impious to say, as I know you all feel, Where two or three are gathered together in the name of youth, there youth will be in the midst of them.

I find my last words in these lines: "The days when meetings never fail With wise and good Are lovely clearings on the trail Through life's wild wood."

"They taste the best of bliss or good That and life, trust ends, Who, glad and gladdening, rejoice In love with loving friends." (Great applause, all rising.)

President Allen It is entirely fitting that Charles Forbes's words are the last you are going to hear at the 154th anniversary. (The exercises were concluded at 4 o'clock p.m.)

Seniors Present One-Act Plays

Some very talented acting featured the presentation of the annual commencement plays by the graduating class of Pynchard high school last Friday night in the school hall. A large audience was present to enjoy the performances of three one-act plays. The first play, "Bumble Puppy," by John William Rogers, was a sleepy farce, in which the fellow down below is getting 50 per cent of what is being required, to say nothing of beyond. Those two extremes must be better treated in the future. We must find ways of giving the top fellows their heads and we must find ways of keeping the lower fellows at their best pace without shame. We do not need much change for the middle man, and he is the great body. He is getting the cream of the course, because the pace is suited to him and he is kept on a stretch.
