Dubois Cantata at

The sixth and last of the series of Lenten fusicales in Christ church will be given on siam Sunday at 4.00 p.m. Theodore Dubois' sell-known cantata, "The Seven Last Words of Christ," will be sung by an augmented boir of fifty voices. This cantata is so familiar to the musical public that it is rarely necessary to remind music lovers of its great seatty. The dramatic sweep of the great horuses in the Eirst and Fifth Words has eldom been equalled in musical literature. It also sever yittle imagination of the musical nind to grasp the scorn, the jeers, and the untred of the mob which gathered before cliate and later surrounded the Cruciixion as it sividity portrayed in these two choruses. The quiet beauty of the choruses which accompany the solo voices in the Second, Third, and Sixth Words are marvels in tonal painting. A dignified Chorale sung quietly by the choir closes the work.

The choir will be assisted by three popular local soloists: Mrs. Alfred R. Harris, soprano; John K. Hill, tenor; and J. Everett Collins, bartone. Mrs. Harris hes been a member of Christ church choir for several years. Her pleasing voice has delighted church congregations and numerous Andover audiences for many years. The Prologue to the cantata, which is a soprano solo, has been sung in past renditions by Mrs. Harris, with pleasing success. Its plaintive strain sets the hearer in a proper mood for the tragedy of the music to follow.

Little need be said of both Mr. Hill and Mr. Collins, as boys they both received their irst musical training in the boy choir of hirst church under John Bachelder, a princer organist and choirmaster at the hurch. Mr. Hill is well known locally as he as the tenor soloist at the Universalist burch in Lawrence for a number of years, or the past five years he has filled a similar osition in the Park Street church in Boston. le has also made many musical friends rough many solo engagements both in awrence and Andover. Mr. Hill will sing se solo in the Sixth Word, "Father, Into hy Hands I Commend My Soul," which evelops into a solo with a quiet choral companiment. The turbulent solo in the 1st of the Seventh Word which impetuously amatizes the fury of the earthquake is cellently handled by Mr. Hill.

As the director of music at Calvary Bapst church in Lawrence and as the conductor the Andover Male Chor, Mr. Collins has oroughly familiarized himself with church is concern the control of the seventh Word which is great effort in the cantata will be the eading Fourth Word, "God, My Father, hy Has Thou Forsaken Me." About forty local men have applied for the new policeman's position since last week, but the appointment will not be made for some item. The selectmen have decided that the candidates must pass physical and mental examinations before becoming eligible for appointment.

they have not collected any town money.

The news that a special town meeting is necessary comes as wedcome news to the sponsors of the playground article which was also declared illegal because the sum mentioned in the warrant had been increased at town meeting from $750 to $1250, and no sum specifically mentioned in an article may be changed upward. The Service club will undoubtedly ask that an article asking $1250 for playground supervision be included in the special warrant. It is also probable that the matter will be taken out of the hands of the school committee, several members of which feel that it would be better in the hands of a committee appointed by the moderator.

At the meeting last night, before it was definitely known that a special town meeting would be necessary, the matter was discussed by the club, and it was finally voted on motion of Henry S. Hopper that the president appoint a committee to investigate the matter and report back at the next meeting. President Charles R. Sext appointed a committee composed of Samuel P. Hulme, Fred-crick C. Smith, J. R. Kimball, William A. Doherty, Fred Cheever, and Selectman Howell F. Shepard. This committee will probably not have to do much now that a special town meeting is necessary.

THE ANDOVER TOWNSMAN

Unusual Expenditures

Some years ago the board of public works came into temporary disrepute with the town because it purchased a tractor and a truck out of its own funds rather than by a specific vote of town meeting for that purpose, and the board was finally advised by the State House authorities that it would be better to include such expenditures in special articles. Maybe it's not required by law, but it would seem only fair to the townspeople to include all unusual expenditures in special articles or at least when the regular budgetary appropriation is asked, to mention the unusual requests specifically as part of the motion. There seems no really valid reason why the state house advice should be limited to rolling equipment alone; extraordinary expenditures, whether they be vehicular machines for the Board of Public Works or stationary machines for the assessors would all seem to come under the same mount was spent last year. If there is an increase, the board looks askance at the budget and asks why. If there is no increase, the board of public works or stationaries that the board of public works or stationary machines for the assessors would all seem to come under the same mount was spent last year. If there is an increase, the board looks askance at the budget and asks why. If there is no increase, the board committee allowed too much, the cross, it usually passes it over quite favorably, with the result that if a precise, it usually passes it over quite favorably, with the result that if a precise, it usually passes it over quite favorably, with the result that if a precise, it usually prety workings of the town government; all they have as the basis for their decisions is the word of the official involved. dence to be misplaced, and one of the safeguards against this would be a requirement that all unusual expenditures, at least, be mentioned in the budget. The boards in Andover are usually pretty much afraid of the public; they spend a certain amount of time preparing their budgets and about double that time wondering whether they dare present all their needs to the public. Consequently, some officials adopt the alternative attitude of slipping in amounts in their budget and hoping that the town meeting won't ask too many questions about it. But that does not seem fair to the voter; furthermore, when such a procedure is brought to light it undermines the confidence which the voters should have in the people they have elected to office.

After this, why don't the town boards act in a new manner? Why don't they first prepare their budgets, including therein all the things that they really the first prepare their budgets, including therein all the things that they really the first prepare their budgets, including therein all the ended for efficient operation of their departments and not worrying whether they can slip it over on not. Then at town meeting why don't they present their budgets to the people, whether they can slip it over on not. The board of specifically what the new requests are, not then explaining why they feel that these requests are worthy ones? Then if the town refuses their appropriations, at least the officials have done their part. If the decision of the voters is a wrong one, the onus is on the voters and not on the officials. But right or wrong, the citizens of this town would have far more respect for their elected officials, for their lected officials, for their lected officials were playing fair with them.

At the present time the board of selectmen perform the function of approving the weekly warrant which contains the expenditures of the various departments. Unfortunately, this approval does not usually extend beyond the legal aspects of the expenditure, and in some cases slip-shod methods by the board have allowed even illegal expenditures to go through. There is no board in town which examines the expenditures of all the departments to see whether or not they are wise, and this certainly should be done, since each board is naturally possessed of a one-sided mind on many of its expenditures.

But this is not to say that the board of selectmen should have the power of talking over with the various departments the question of whether or not the expenditures are wise. The selectmen are favoing a far better job of it than they had done on Jessie Costello. Then after the police had straightened that of selectmen should have the power of talking over with the various departments the question of whether or not the expenditures are wise. Exeter and Andover may differ in many things, but when it comes to town meetings, they're evidently just alike, according to the following editorial which appeared last week in the New Hampshie town's excellent paper, the News-Letter.

"The 1934 fown meeting in Exeter ran its emotional course to the accompaniment of an unusual amount of undignified invective, but when the confusion of tongues was at last stilled, it was found that in actual accomplishment no serious errors were made. The appropriations recommended by the budget committee were adopted, and money was voted for band concerts and the reprinting of town valuations. The annually recurrent proposition that the town dispense with fire insurance, to copy a favorite phrase of a town clerk of two hundred years ago, "was passed in the negative." Town meetings undoubtedly offer a clumsy method of determining the popular will. There is usually much waste of time and always a great waste of words. The opportunity to be heard by an audience that cannot escape is often too

Evolution of Race Horse

With reference to the origin of the Arab horse, there is an interesting Assyrian tablet in the British mu-seum which shows that the horses of seum which shows that the horses of the period bore an astonishing resemblance to the present-day Arab, says a letter in the London Times. One of the most famous breeders of Arab ponies, one 'Ta'alib ben Ta'alib, had his stables at Mosul, and he contrived to keep it more or less secure from the depredations of the Turks during the war. His animals were well known on the Bombay and Poeona race courses. It would seem that the breed has existed in and about Mosul since the days of Nineveb, very much in the the days of Nineveh, very much in the same form.

A large delegation of Andover farmers attended the 20th annual Farmers' Day at Essex Agricultural school, Hathorne on Wednesday. Hugh P. Baker, president of the Massachusetts State College at Amherst, was the guest speaker of the morning and his fine address on "The Future of Agriculture" gave everyone something vital to think about. Other speakers in the various sectional meetings were instructive as well as interesting. The greenhouses were beautiful with flowers and vegetables, also seedlings were in evidence ready to make the grounds of the school beautiful later on. The exhibits of the girls' work in the various classes told of the sinterest that the pupils take in their work. Then best of all, it gave to the mothers and fathers of Essex County a better understanding of what Essex Aggie is doing for their boys and girls. Also it gave to the Essex county farmers a feeling that here was a place that their problems could be freely discussed and all could profit by the mistakes and successes of the others, a place where old friendships were renewed and new friendships made, in short, "Farmers' Day" binds the farmers of Essex county farefields his made, in short, "Farmers' Day" binds the farmers of Essex county together as few other things could do.

Banker Speaks to Service Club land

the speaker stated at the outset of his talk that the United States was the only country that has had to pay a horrid toll of bank failures—a sharp contrast to Canada where not a single bank has closed its doors.

failures—a sharp contrast or cannot a single bank has closed its doors.

Mr. Bennett sketched briefly the history of banking in this country from the time when Jefferson's belief that branch banking was a challenge to our liberty won over Hamilton's plans for one central bank with branches to the present day, when again branch banking is being seriously considered. Down to the Civil War Jeherson's feelings prevailed, there being only one brief period of a national banking system. In those days checks, most essential now, were unknown, and instead the bank's own notes were passed out in return for deposits. Each bank's notes had a limited circulation with fluctuating value from section to section.

sential now, were unanals of the country with fluctuating value from section to section.

This meant an insecure currency, which was corrected to a degree by Salmon Chaes, Civil War secretary of the treasury, who persuaded Congress to form a national banking system. But in time it was found that the new currency of the country lacked elasticity, that the required increase and decrease in supply did not accompany similar changes in demand.

Accordingly the Federal Reserve act was established, and for a while it was considered established, and for a while it was considered established, and for a while it was considered to the enjoyment of the currency to the music work at Phillips academy the season, in Dr. Pfatteicher's absence, gave the to four hundred bank failures, and since the follows a group of piano solos. trade.

The comptroller of the currency told Mr. Bennett that the trouble was not lack of quality in the banker; rather it lay in the fact that the United States was going through an economic revolution. The development of chain stores, centralized industries, etc. removed huge balances from small banks into central banks, with the result that bit by bit we have been evolving a series of small local banks, compelled to cast their lot with one local industry, rising or falling with it.

The comptroller expressed the opinion that local industry, rising or rating with it.

The comptroller expressed the opinion that the only way of remedying the trouble was to provide the banks with diversified paper; in others words, to give loans to many industries. In that way, if one industry had a drop, the bank's connections with the others would prevent a bank failure.

the bank's connections with the others would prevent a bank failure.

The reason for the strength of the Canadian banks, Mr. Bennett asserted, was that in every one of the nine big banks there is diversified paper, and their strength is reflected in the branch banks. The speaker mentioned two arguments used against the Canadian system. The first was the chance of the local individual to secure a loan if the central bank had to approve, but Mr. Bennett dismissed this by stating that the many who deserves credit secures it just as readily in Canada as elsewhere. The second argument was that the central banks would not have enough pioneer spirit, would not reach out into new communities. However, the speaker cited instances in Canada to show that with keen competition among the nine big banks, branches are opened almost too freely.

Concluding, Mr. Bennett protested against the belief that a bank is strong only if it is locally governed. He said that where local banks are sound, they should be protected against branches of a big institution, but where they are not, branches should replace them.
