Joan Lefebvre Is Most Popular Baby

Joan Lefebvre, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lefebvre of Elm street, was chosen "Little Miss Popularity" at the annual baby show held last Friday night at the summer playground. The popular applause accorded Joan by the children gave her first place in her class and then gave her the title on which Andover's babies feast covetous eyes every summer. She was entered by her older sister, Claire.

James McGrath proved most popular in the class for children under one year, while Mary Grace Young and Ruth Campbell were the first choices in the next two classes. David and Ruth Anderson were the first prizewinning twins.

Each place winning haby was accounted.

Our Primary Aspirants

Over 2500 names will appear on the ballots at the biennial state Primary election to be held on Thursday, September 20. The large number of candidates means but one thing: there will be many opportunities for voters to make mistakes.

Presumably the names appearing on the ballot this year were selected through a method which was suggested in an effort to preduce better primary candidates. Last spring the voters of the state—a few of them—went to so-called preprimaries to vote for delegates to the state conventions of the two major parties. These delegates in the convention then nominated candidates to represent their respective parties in the more important races for office. This method was supposed to supplant the old method whereby candidates merely had to secure a certain number of signatures to be nominated.

The result of the pre-primary has been just the same as in the days when only one primary was held. For the local offices of representative, senator, registrar, etc., the old system of self-nomination still prevailed anyway, with the result that we still have a large number of candidates, many of whom are in as bad as that.

Business and labor leaders predict a pickup in business in the fall. Probably they figure that what goes down must come up.

"2500 enter race for nominations." Few of se realized the unemployment situation was at bad as that.

Business and labor leaders predict a pick in business in the fall. Probably they figte that what goes down must come up.

Nine lighthouses are for sale in Maine. In your good editorial headed "Zoning Andover" printed in last week's Townsman, you want to start light housekeeping?

No prizes will be awarded at the playround boxing contests tonight. They can be ghters, but not prize fighters.

Dear Mr. Editor:

"Planning Board to Present Plans." Is that still a joke, Mr. Editor? I shall be interested in any plan presented by the boad. In your good editorial headed "Zoning Andover" jurined in last week's Townsman, you said, "Municipalities have the very unfortunate habit of paying too much attention to the present and forgetting the future." That is only too true. If there had been a Planing Board thousands of collars would not week new's Townsman, you said, "Municipalities have the very unfortunate habit of paying too much attention to the present all the state of the said of the very unfortunate habit of paying too much attention to the present all the invested in any plan presented by the boad. In your good editorial headed "Zoning Andover" jurined in last week's Townsman, you said, "Municipalities have the very unfortunate habit of paying too much attention to the present and forgetting the future."

That is only too true. If there had been a Planing Board thousands of dollars would not have been wasted on Memorial Hall and the new school building.

Also "Andever will be a far better place to the in if it will listen to its planning board."

That will depend to a large degree on the present and the One of our contemporaries remarks: "Harvard is conducting a series of tests to study fatigue. It should include the Harvard accent, which fatigues many people." The writer probably meant that the fatigue is brought on not by those who speak the Harvard accent but by those who speak about it.

In connection with the planning board work, the building inspector has issued the following notice:

"This is to serve notice that the Town of Andover has a By-Law known as the Building Law, excepts of which are as follows:

"Section 5.—No Building shall be constructed or altered except in conformity with the provisions of this By-Law.
"Section 6.—A person intending to erect or make alterations in such building, or his duly authorized agent, before he proceeds to build or erect the same, or lay the foundation thereof, or to make the said alterations, must file application for a permit with the Inspector of Buildings.
"Section 7.—The Inspector shall grant be planned and detailed descriptions are in conformity with this By-Law. No work shall be commenced until a permit is issued.

"Section 59.—The Board of Selectmen upon the application of the Inspector of Buildings may institute proceedings to enforce the Stall award to application of the Inspector of the stall be a supported to the stall the property of the stall as a support of the support Bereft of her sailor father in infancy by his loss at sea she grew to womanhood in Dennis, a place ever afterward of cherished memories to her.

After a short residence in Lynn she came to Andover forty-eight years ago to live with her brother, John C. Sears a shoe dealer in town, and was a devoted companion and helper to him and his wife (Susan Johnson) as long as they lived. On Mrs. Sears' death, generous provision was made for Miss Sarah and her older sister Miss Lydia who shared the home with her until her death a few years ago.

shared the home with her until her death a few years ago.

She was a loyal member of the Free Christian Church for forty-six years and in her days of health was active in the work of its Sunday School and Benevolent Society.

By her long and faithful service to others, her cheerful, triendly nature and her genuine Christian womanhood, she won a warm place in the hearts of all who knew her.

The tender and faithful care of loving attendants blessed her closing years.

She has won the Master's plaudit "Well done, good and faithful servant,—enter thou into the joy of thy lord."

The funeral service was conducted this afternoon in her late home on Whittier street

THE phone bell woke me. I answered and heard Ned Kendall's voice demand:
"Say, do you go to bed with ear muffs on?"

muffs on?"

"No," I said, "but a clear conscience brings sound sleep. You wouldn't know about that,"

He gave a snort of contempt, then:

"Listen, Bert—I need you. There's an English producer named Sir Wilfred Leigh-Bromley in town, visiting the studios. I'm dated to interview him at nine tonight for a feature story. How about you handling it? Only take a short while. I've got a date."

Only take a short while. I've got a date."

I thought over my plans. I was to meet Mirlam's train at one in the morning. I'd been reminding myself of the day and hour for a week. A man has to be careful to remember when his wife's coming home.

"All right. But why don't you lay off chasing? Some day the Husbands' Protective league is going to put ants in your pants."

"Hah! Herbert Saunders, the saint, Man, how I'd love to catch you without your halo some time! Well, thanks for taking the job, anyway. Better use my name; that'll save explanations. He's at the Christine-Plaza. So long."

I hung up, swung out of bed, and started dressing. There was still some tell-tale evidence to be disposed of: bottles to be thrown out and a couple of shirts with rouge-smudged collars for the laundry. Mirlam wouldn't be shirts with rouge-smudged collars the laundry. Mirlam wouldn't be eased if she found those around.

Our table at the Capitol club was in an alcove near the dance floor; we had a good view of the place. Sir Wilfred ordered sparkling Moselle, then said:

"Look here, Mr. Kendall—you're sure this idea isn't a bore to you'r. I said: "Not at all—a pleasure."

"I'm glad, You see, your Hollywood night clubs are quite famous with us abroad. I should hate to have left without even a look at one, and this was my last chance. Shall have to be off tomorrow."

I murmured something intended to be politely regretful.

"Yes," he pursued; "back to Elstree and the job. Hope I shall profit some by the immense lot I've learned here. Been trying for a year to manage this visit—ever since my wife came over to appear in your films. By the by I dare say you know her: Mae Siddon?"
I did, though not as his wife. But I kept surprise from showing.
I don't know when he first saw them, "Mr. Kendall," he said, "would you verify an impression, please? I believe that's my wife across the floor, dancing with the blond young gentleman?"
I looked and saw Mae Siddon ring tightly against Ned Kendall. They moved a very little to the waltz music, "Yes," I told him; "guess it is."

"Rotten little cheat!" said Leigh Bromley through shu teeth, "Do you by chance know the man, Mr. Kendall?"

I had my mouth ready with the name when I realized the man out there and I couldn't both be Ned Kendall?"

I had my mouth ready with the name when I realized the man out there and I couldn't both be Ned Kendall. Then I considered explaining the substitution; but I didn't, It was yell and I always had sense enough to conduct my affairs discreetly.

"No," I said, finally; "never saw himbefore. Sorry."

Sir Wilfred rose, "Well, perhaps I can learn. Excuse me a moment."

The dance was ending as he moved away. I drank some more wine and decided that if Leigh-Bromley came back without his information, I'd spill it after all. Ned had it coming, and I had a reputation as a moralist to maintain.

The producer had been gone about ten minutes when I became aware of the headwaiter, bending over me. He said confidentially:

"Beg pardon, sir; the gentleman who was here entrusted me with a message for you. He had no time to write. He said the lady left her table long enough for him to barge over, posing as an autograph collector, and get the bounder's signature. He said you'd understand."

I node and asked if that were all, "No, sir. He said he must rush off at once to look up his autorney's local agent and put the matter in his hands tonight; there'd be no time in the morning, as his boat sailed at six. He asked me to convey his humblest apologies, sir."

The mention of time reminded me to look at my watch, I jumped up; I had just half an hour to reach the dept and meet Miriam, I said:

INTRODUCTIONS

DEAR Mrs. Post: How should my young son. aged ten, be introduced to our friends?

Answer: "Mrs. Jones, this is my son Bobby," or "Ethel, this is Bobby," then to Bobby, "—Miss Blake." Bobby then says, "How do you do, Mrs. Jones" (or "Miss Blake").

Dear Mrs. Post: Is there any way that would be correct to meet the young girl in the next apartment house? Her father is a professional associate of my father, but outside of the hospital at which both are attending physicians, they never meet. We are really the newcomers in the neighborhood so neighborhood courtesy cannot be used as a means.

Answer: The strictly proper thing to do is to wait until a friend in common introduces you. But since very to do is to wait until a friend in common introduces you. But since very few people take strict proprieties of this sort very seriously, you might perhaps write her a note, tell her your father knows her father and that you would like very much to meet her, and ask if she will name an hour when you may go to see her. This is of course not at all according to rule, and if she does not answer your note you will feel humiliated, and there will be nothing that you can do except forget that you ever wanted to se her. On the other hand, there is no reason to suppose she will not be delighted to suppose she will not be delighted to

Dear Mrs, Post: I am secretary to the president of a large dress manufacturing company and am often introduced to customers. Is it proper, whether the buyer is a man or woman, for me to rise and shake hands?

Answer: This depends upon the particular circumstances of your own position. If you have had any amount of personal correspondence with these buyers, you would rise and greet them, if they are strangers, you would probably follow the conventional impersonal behavior of an office employee.

Dear Mrs, Post: I am having a party for a friend who is staying with me. Do I mention her name first, or those of my guests (all women) when introducing them?

Answer: Name of older person appulled for the variety of the service of the servi

The Midnight Fire Alarm - All False

You're comfortably ensconced in a nice soft bed on a cold summer's night. You're sleeping the sleep of the innocent, or as near the sleep of the innocent, or as near the sleep of the innocent, or as near the sleep of the innocent as a newspaperman can sleep. Soon you're wondering what that murmuring in your cars is—soon the murmuring turns to blasting—and you realize gradually that it's the fire alarm.

You try to count it, but you're still three quarters asleep and the alarm is crazy anyway. Pretty soon it stops, and you sett be back again in your nice soft bed. Soon you're wondering what that murmuring in your easis—soon the murmuring turns to blasting—and you realize gradually that it's the fire alarm.

This time you can almost count it right—now you're only half asleep and the alarm is only half crazy. This time it's 23, and you say to yoursefi, "That's Ballardvale." You lie down again to go to sleep, but your conscience, or your curiosity, bothers you, and you don't know whether it's a cloud, and you don't know whether it's a cloud of smoke or just a cloud. Then your brain becomes cloudy, and you lie down again.

It's no murmuring this time—it's a blast right away. You get up and while you're trying to get into all your clothes at once, you see it's almost two 'clock and you count thalarm, 23. Ballardvale again. The whole some should be dearing the sound of smoke or just a cloud, and you lie down again.

You can't be bothered with stockings, just your sneakers are enough. And who ever saw a newspaperman going to a fire at 2 a.m. with and the car-buying public, it is desirable that all facts and statements should be presented clearly and WITH-OUT CONFUSION.

Several points about the Ford V-8 seem to be important enough at this time to merit re-statement and re-peated emphasis. They are: Wheelase, Delivered Prices, Equipment and Economy of Operation.

WHEELBASE: The Ford V-8 comes to you in only one wheelbase—a full 112 inches. There is no doubt or question about this. When we refer to the Ford V-8, we always mean this car in this size . . . And it is important to realize—in addition—that because the V-8 construction saves engine space which becomes usable body space.

DELIVERED PRICES: At no time this year have Ford V-8 prices been raised.
Instead, they have been reduced. When Authorized Ford Dealers of New England
