Town Meeting Is June 29

Worried town officials were this week anxiously promoting the special town meeting, scheduled for next Wednesday at 7:30 in Memorial Auditorium, as they anticipated considerable difficulty in getting a quorum.

The Selectman and Town Manager Thomas E. Duff have been concerned that fewer than the required 350 voters will show up at the session, which will consider four zoning articles and one concerning vacation pay for town employees.

The meeting was postponed from an earlier date, so that legally-required advertisements could appear in the newspapers.

Of top concern to most officials is the country club project in West Andover.

This plan can not be put into effect until the voters approve an amendment to the zoning by-law

Action Due On Urban Renewal

The Housing Authority is scheduled to meet later this week to consider accepting planning funds for urban renewal planning here.

This is the first step in securing a government-financed plan for a renewal project, which in its final stage would come before town meeting for acceptance. At this point, there are no town funds involved, however.

The town will receive a $62,000 grant for the planning stage, according to municipal officials who attended a conference in New York Monday.

Henry I. Halprin of the field operations division of Urban Renewal in the federal Housing and Home Finance Agency explained the procedures that must be followed by the local housing authority.

Need Hospitality For British Boys

Eight local families will have the rare chance this summer to become a working part of the "Experiment in International Living". Seven of them will entertain a teen-age lad from Great Britain, and the eighth will provide hospitality for a teacher who accompanies the boys.

No one yet knows who the families will be - that, frankly, is a bit of a problem.

For volunteers are needed, and quickly.

Mrs. Charles Farrington, 19 Argyle st., expressed the problem simply: "The boys and their teacher are coming, unexpectedly, and now we need to hear from eight families who are willing to provide hospitality for them for three weeks in August".

It seems that the best of plans fell through somehow, and the scheduled visit of the group to another community was cancelled. But their trip was not.

And Mrs. Farrington, as a former participant in one of the "Experiment in International Living" trips abroad, was asked to seek out eight interested families here.

Graduation Essays Use Theme Of "Youth"

SALUTATORY
by Deborah C. Newcomb

I speak for the members of the class of 1960, as I welcome you to these exercises which mark the closing of our high school years. As the first class to complete the full course in this building, we have a special feeling for it. We are grateful to you, parents and friends, for making this beautiful building possible, and for guiding us this far on our route to adulthood. Although we are still growing, we realize what a formative and important part of life high school is. For all that you have done to help us, we thank you.

"The Youth That Never Grows Old"

Youth has been defined as the quality of being "fresh or vigorous in body, mind, or feeling." If this were a true definition, anyone with unbiased opinions and a mind receptive to new ideas, can remain young. I have read, "There is an old age of the heart, and a youth that never grows old." I believe that we must cultivate this eternal youth and shun the old age of the heart to the best of our ability. Although a respect for tradition is requisite to any civilization, the "old age of the heart," or stubborn refusal to accept anything new or different, is fatal to any nation that wishes to grow. China, although one of the most cultured countries on earth, lagged behind the rest of the world for hundreds of years, because she remained stagnant.

Many people believe that youth enjoy life. They feel that young people of high school and college age should have a good time while they can, and take life seriously later. I also believe that young people should enjoy life, but that they have definite responsibilities. One of these responsibilities is the struggle to retain idealism, and another, the striving to improve wherever possible - traits for which youth is fabled. In these times of cynicism and unrest, youth must struggle to keep morale, both individual and national, from deteriorating.

Another important responsibility of youth is the supplying of fresh and original ideas to the adult. Today's youth is unusually well informed - it has the ability to evaluate the new ideas, and should pass them on to the older person, who has the wisdom and experience necessary to use these ideas to the best advantage.

If youth can only live up to its responsibilities, and learn to combine the experience of age with its own idealism and originality, we all should have a happier and more peaceful existence. Let the youth of today and the youth of yesterday complement each other, instead of forever trying to outdo each other. Then we should truly have "the youth that never grows old."

THEME:

The Youth Of America Speak by Susan M. Shaw

"And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts." Tonight our classmates center their thoughts on youth.

"Youth - sturdy youth - strong and straight as young pines Figures with reaching hands and lighted eyes -

Symbols of the future."
Youth - rich in heritage and of untold powers. One could say that our heritage goes back to the first civilized people of Egypt and Babylon. Much in literature, philosophy, art, and architecture, we owe to the ancient Greeks. The Romans brought new codes of law and order and carried civilization to northern Europe. Here, our ancestors collected this wealth of knowledge, adding their own gifts. All these sources have since enriched the American life and youth.

"We are symbols of the strain, the toil, the work,

The eagerness that fired millions who have trooped before us - Who have been of the same frightened fiber, of the same tensile thread.

We are all of that, and more."
The prominence of youth in building our country has always been noted. Many great men of our nation showed promise of their work as youth. Benjamin Franklin at seventeen was a successful printer. Thomas Jefferson helped create our government while in his early twenties.

"Youth had an important place among freedom loving peoples who struggled for independence and sovereignty...

They were lighthearted and strong, the youth of our young country. The nation was growing, and the spirit of youth,

Set to the task of building and exploring a new country, was gaining fresh strength."

The rapid expansion of science and the arts offer even more to youth today. Now, we have an even greater part to play. There are new frontiers to be discovered and unlimited challenges to be met.

"The last decade has brought a new era,

And American youth are faced with new problems:...

Although living in the wealthiest, most powerful,

And best educated country on the globe,...

All have their weaknesses.

Some youth are lazy,...

Some are ignorant, their minds filled with indecision,...

Yet most youth have indomitable strength:

Strength of character, of body, and of mind,...

They have courage, initiative, and foresight:...

And seek maturity and understanding.

The past is filled, and youth must reach new ground,...

Youth - sturdy youth - fearless yet fearful

Youth with reaching hands and lighted eyes.

Symbols of the future--"

Our salutatorian has already discussed the necessity for youth's remaining young. As the program progresses, we shall hear the thoughts of others - of one who feels strongly about apathetic youth; of one who supports adult opinions of youth; and of one who sees youth placed in a situation peculiar to our times.

Whether youth is to continue to have prestige in a complicated world rests with youth itself. And so, the youth of America speak,

ESSAY

"Are We A Silent Generation?" by Marjorie E. Mazel

"A Silent Generation" - these are the three words with which some adult critics have labeled the young people of high school age today. Certainly, the word "silent" is not intended in a physical sense; for loud music, long telephone conversations, and noisy gatherings seem to characterize our generation. "Silent" refers, instead, to a mental attitude, the apathy and lack of world awareness that American youth display. Primarily, the word "silent" implies a generation that does not think. The youth of many generations have been designated as apathetic and indifferent to others; why have we been singled out as "the Silent Generation?"

Surely, there are many young people today who are concerned with ideas and principles beyond their required school subjects. The assistance provided to the American Red Cross by Andover High students, the volunteer work done by many students at the Lawrence General Hospital, the participation of youth in the White House Conference on Children and Youth and in a similar conference held at Merrimack College are only a few of the indications that some young people are conscious of local, national, and international affairs.

But what of the others, the youth whose thoughts never extend beyond

He commented that the acceptance of many seniors in colleges across the country reflects favorably on the ability of the teachers they had during their 12 years in school.

The musical portion of the program was under the direction of Mrs. Miriam McArdle, director of music. Miss Kathryn Burr of the fifth grade was solist.

Honor students lauded at the assembly included:

William Clift, Brook Newcomb, Helen Auchterlonie, Diana Cole, Lucy Crane, David Curry, Candice

the latest hit song or the sports sections of the newspaper. They constitute the "Silent Generation." The very idea of a nation so devoid of thought, as the critics feel, seems incredible in our modern age where television, radio, and newspapers are constantly racing to provide us with news, opinions, and ideas. Modern transportation and communication have brought once faraway peoples and places within the easy reach of everyone. We do not have to search for information about current happenings; this news is abundant and as accessible as the television knob.

Our age, therefore, seems conducive to thought and understanding. As a further assistance, the youth of today are less restricted in their thought and expression than were the youth of previous generations. Why, then, are we silent? Certainly, we do not lack access to information, the primary essential to understanding and thought. Perhaps the ceaseless repetition of opinions and ideas with which television has bombarded us has dulled our individual thought - has accustomed us unconsciously to accept the opinions of others, rather than to form our own.

Knowledge and experience acquired through reading are requisites for a world conscious and aware generation. It is significant, therefore, that in a recent poll taken in a sophomore and a senior homeroom at Andover High School, the average number of books that students read independently per year was five. Students certainly do much independent reading during the elementary grades. What happens to many of these young people when they reach junior high and high school? Is reading an unfashionable pastime during the high school days, or do the numerous extracurricular activities keep them too busy to read? A Missouri high school newspaper editorial stated that the last American who sat down to read died in the days of long ago; that although we cover our country with one hundred thousand tons of Sunday newspapers, we do not read them, we are too busy.

Perhaps, although we do not think so, not enough was expected of us during our high school years; and next year, on our own in the business field or in college, the "Silent" of our generation will become more aware of the world and begin to think.

Are we a "Silent Generation"? Although I think it is unfortunate that I and the others of our generation do not exercise their entire capacity for thought, I know that I have not really answered this question. I feel, moreover, that if our country is going to survive as a great nation, our generation and succeeding generations must fully utilize their capabilities. They cannot be silent. I hope that we as the workers and leaders of our country will accept this responsibility thoughtfully and maturely and that we will strive to perpetuate and enhance our great American nation.

ESSAY "Adult Opinions On Youth"

by James P. Stewart
Aware that one of my classmates was to give her views on youth, I endeavored to discover the attitude of adults toward youth.

After questioning a number of parents, I found that they, the parents, could be classified into three groups. There are those who understand youth, those who oppose youth, and unfortunately those who just do not care. It was pleasing to find that the first group was the most prevalent.

Those who seemed to understand young people felt that it was environment rather than people that changed; that youth of today will be able to run the world of tomorrow; and that they know much more than they are willing to admit. Because of this, most high school students are not fully exploited. It is not until they enter college or a profession that they learn how to make best use of their abilities. The competition which is encountered there is the best way to eliminate the "do as little as possible" attitude.

One very understanding parent stated that in order to guide youth correctly, mature adults must assist the less experienced, for without this guidance, students will never attain their goals. Another felt that although much has been said about the irresponsibility of today's youth, they do have a broader knowledge than any previous generation, and are sometimes too serious about life.

I agree with these adults. I have great faith in young people's ability to think, accept responsibilities, and act maturely, for my generation has accomplished many things. A few of these are the running of the state government on Good Government Day, an experience which illustrated the adult way in which young people are able to take over the various state offices and debate most intelligently the same issues as their adult representatives and senators do; the professional presentations as demonstrated by several high school musicians at a recent assembly; the school science fair so successfully carried out by students, and the fact that more than ever, youth are becoming active citizens. Many are graduating from high school to go on to college where they will prepare further for life. These well-educated young people will then be able to step into industry, government, education, and other fields more easily.

I am glad that many adults are able to place as much confidence in us as they do, for older generations will always be a little suspicious of youth, despite the fact that we are a product of all that for which they have worked. I hope that such barriers as alienate one generation from another may be at least partially removed.

As for my generation, I hope that with adult guidance, we may become a group of whom all may be justly proud; but because we are still young, we ask our parents' prayer:

"Please, God, let not the young too long be sad
Carrying the burdens
We have had
Lead them into the sun
Within their day and time;
They will so greatly need
To see it shine."

ESSAY

"The Twentieth Century: Dawn Or Twilight?" by Susan G. Slade

"There have been ages of hope and ages of despair before now. Historians of ideas inform us that for a thousand years nobody believed in Progress. They inform us also that the general opinion shortly before the year one thousand was that the world was about to end, although, five hundred years later, the notion that the possibilities open to man were limitless was already beginning to be widely assumed. But were the two opinions ever before held simultaneously and progress itself regarded as the possible cause of impending catastrophe?" This thought, expressed in a recent book to describe the twentieth century, could refer to many periods. People throughout history have wondered whether the world in which they existed was temporary or permanent-doomed to destruction or destined to hold greater opportunities for man. They have also puzzled over the destructive or constructive nature of their achievements.

In order to evaluate the present, we must remember that each person considers the period in which he is living more important to him personally than any previous one. Whether or not men in some ancient land thought that their world was doomed may not matter to us, but the possibility of the destruction of the present-day world is of overwhelming importance to all.

The progress of mankind affects greatly the transient or lasting position of life in the world. Each succeeding generation has considered its own present the most dangerous potentially, because the most progress has been accomplished up to that time. As an increasing number of fields have become open to research, people have pondered the worth of progress, particularly in the area of science. This is especially true of that age of paradox, our own present. Its problems are not completely unparalleled in our own history. We have been threatened by and eventually confronted with economic failure, civil and world war, and a host of other difficulties; but they have never seemed to be so highly complex, affecting so many people, as they do today. The twentieth century has witnessed a new dawn of progress; it could be a harbinger of twilight to the civilization we know. That we have made great economic, social, and scientific advancements does

EDITORIAL THOUGHTS

It's Your Job

Theory and practice are quite separate on occasion — thus the Selectmen are worried that there may not be enough voters at the special town meeting next Wednesday at Memorial Auditorium.

Theory has it that registered voters, many of whom also pay taxes in considerable amounts, will turn out to a town meeting because it is their responsibility as citizens. And if this is insufficient reason, they will respond because their own self-interest as taxpayers is at stake.

In practice, a small percentage of the voters ever bothers to attend a town meeting. And an even smaller percentage pays attention to the special session that occasionally is summoned.

Specially at this time of year, when the weather is nice and the grass needs mowing, there is apt to be a poor attendance. We can't blame the Selectmen for worrying that 350 men and women may not show up.

Those of our citizens who feel that they have some responsibility for helping to establish policy in the town should not fail to attend. They should not take it for granted that at least 350 other people will be there — this is the easiest way to wind up without the necessary quorum.

Each voter should assume that he, or she, will be the one person whose presence is needed to attain that goal.

Let's take our jobs as citizens seriously and attend this vital session.

20 M.P.H.?

Ever try driving 20 miles an hour for a sustained period? It's an interesting experiment.

Because in this modern age of automatic transmissions some drivers find that they have to shift into the low gear to keep their cars at the 20 mph rate of speed.

Normally there isn't too much attention paid to this problem of keeping a car at a slow speed.

In fact, horse power is a big selling point in the automotive industry and many of us are more concerned with this factor than with how slowly the car will travel for sustained distances.

However, the state law restricts speeds to 20 mph in congested areas, in the absence of local rules even further reducing this speed. And there is no question but what the limit can be enforced, if this is the desire of the law enforcement authorities.

It seems basic, however, to assume that most of those employed in our enforcement agencies use common sense when going about their assigned jobs. There are times, under certain weather and traffic conditions, when 20 mph is far too fast. There are other times when 30 mph in the same area may not be excessive.

If enforcement is handled on a common sense basis, there can certainly be no justifiable complaint about it from any source. But if an arbitrary 20 mph enforcement is forthcoming here, many drivers will find themselves breaking the limit, and in trouble with the Registry of Motor Vehicles, even though they are driving sanely and properly for the type of area.

The contract of painting the Frye Village School has been awarded to James May Hardy and Cole will lay a new floor in the schoolhouse.

Seven girls and five boys made up the graduating class of Punchedard this year.

In this issue is reprinted a set of rules and by-laws for the Frye Village School, as drawn up in May, 1842, by Enoch Frye, William Poor and Timothy Foster. Among other regulations, it is specified that "No teacher shall be allowed to carry any club, or any other deadly weapon, into the school for the discipline of the school". The rules also state that a "scholar" should be designated to get water, who is able to carry a pailful at a time. There apparently had been complaints from neighbors about pupils surrounding the wells.

Fifty-four pupils, 32 of whom were boys, were graduated from the ninth grade in exercises yesterday afternoon in Punchedard hall. A large group of relatives and friends was present.

The driver of a banana van was charged with driving to endanger and speeding by officer David Gillespie Tuesday morning, after the van struck a state highway vehicle parked on the side of South Main st. Two of the state men were slightly injured.

Ballardvale will hold its celebration of the Fourth of July this year, starting with a bonfire at midnight. There are many plans for activities throughout the holiday. The center of town will not have a celebration this year.

Fire, causing damage estimated at $1,000 swept through the rear of a Main st. home Sunday. The only casualty was the family cat, which firemen reported had suffocated in a shed attached to the kitchen.

All eight of the visitors come from Blackburn, England or its immediate vicinity. Located in Lancashire, Blackburn is an industrial community.

George Kirby, 36, leader of the group, teaches English and Physical Education.

The boys are John Brewer, 17; Robert Jones, 19; Robert Johnson, 17; David Ambrose, 17; Francis Baxendale, 18; Anthony Parkinson, 17; and Thomas Smith, 18.

They will arrive in Montreal, Canada, Aug. 5 and come to Andover by bus. After three weeks here, they will leave for visits to Philadelphia and Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Farrington explained that each of the group has already written a letter, to be forwarded to whomever his host will be here. This will give local families an opportunity to write to their guest and become better acquainted before his arrival.

During the three-week visit, a few side trips and group activities will be planned, with the assistance of the host families and Mrs. Farrington.

Otherwise, she explained, "each guest should become a real member of the family, do chores, take part in family activities. This is the best way for them to get well acquainted with us, the main reason for the existence of the organization that arranges their trips."

The "Experiment in International Living", with offices all over the world, provides opportunities for persons from all countries to visit others — believing that this is the best way for them to know and understand varied customs and cultures.

Inquiries from interested families should be directed to Mrs. Farrington.

And, as she pointed out, the trip scheduled for this group of eight appears to be in real jeopardy unless eight families here do offer their hospitality.

not mean that we have exhausted all forms of progress; nor does the development of instruments of war assure our twilight and eventual ruin. There is not only a possibility but a need for advancement in all fields, especially the humanities. If such a need were realized, perhaps a reawakening of romanticism - a rebirth of interest in individual expression - might occur. We may also continue to initiate and improve scientific discoveries. From the possibilities mentioned, we certainly should realize that we can justifiably have very high hopes. Our ability to recognize and utilize constructive opportunities will determine the future of this century. Those of us, the youth of America, with fresh, forthright thoughts must make our voices heard in expressing our ideas. We cannot excuse inability to do so by plaintive reference to our inexperience; no age is unique in having problems, be those problems unprecedented or old recurrent ones. In either case, we must try to solve ours.

our education and of a portion of our lives, during which we have been dependent upon our parents. We shall probably never again in our lives have the benefit of so much supervision and assistance in both our learning and in our living. Whether we further our education formally or enter the world of business or industry, we will as we continue to learn, no longer be protected.

Experiences, impressions, and acquaintances have already contributed to the process of our education and will continue to influence us throughout our lives. Can we evaluate the lessons we have learned from these so that we may make use of them in the future? If we can, we may profit from the mistakes we have made and attain the maturity and independence that is now expected of us. There is a saying: "Youth must be served, but not all the time." We have reached that time when we should no longer expect constant service from our parents, teachers, and friends, who have aided us in our childhood and adolescent years; such a dependence should not be necessary now. Our high school years have, in part, prepared us for the problems we will undoubtedly encounter and the burdens we will have to shoulder. Now, we must assume the responsibilities of our own lives and become aware of the limitless opportunities that are available to us as youth. Although we eagerly anticipate the years ahead, we cannot leave our high school years without regret that they are ended, and certainly not without lasting gratitude to those who have helped us.

URBAN RENEWAL PLANNING DECISION

(Continued from Page One) grant, the Authority here must secure the services of a planning consultant, who would view the area and draw detailed plans for the project.

The next step, and one to be taken in the early stages, is the appointment of a director, who would be in over-all charge.

After the completed plans have been approved by the federal authority, they will be presented to a town meeting for final acceptance locally. It is at this stage that the voters will have an opportunity to make up their minds whether such a project is worthwhile.

Until then, it was stressed, there are no town funds involved.

TOWN MEETING NEXT WEDNESDAY

Other zoning articles concern a shopping center district near the Dascomb rd. interchange with Route 93, for a proposed motel; a garden apartment district off Morton st.; and a change of zoning at Stevens and North Main sts., where the land is now divided between industrial and residential.

The vacation pay article concerns acceptance of a statute making it legal to advance this money to the employees. Although this practice has been observed for years, it has been ruled illegal unless the enabling statute is accepted.
