application process.

The proponents of STEAM Studio, led in part by School Committee member David Birnbach, now have until Oct. 25 to file a full application, making official their plans to establish a new education center focused on science, technology and the arts in Andover.

"The team is excited to go to the next step," Birnbach said. "We're focused now on completing the final application."

The state is expected to issue its final decision next February, after a lengthy public hearing and vetting process.

One question still unanswered is where STEAM Studio will be sited. And that answer could take some time. JC Considine, spokesman for the state Department of Elementary and Secondary Education. said the plan could actually gain state approval before the school has a home.

'Most of these groups won't find an actual location until they receive a charter," Considine said.

Birnbach said the group behind STEAM Studio is "looking at five locations," but declined to identify them given ongoing negotiations. He did say existing buildings in Andover are being eyed.

"We hope to get more, to finalize the plans on the school building in the next couple months," he said.

As for an ideal location for a charter school, Birnbach pointed to a model charter out in San Diego, Calif. — High Tech High as one similar to the STEAM School vision. Built in 2000, the California-based school serves 570 students in grades 9 through 12, See SCHOOL, Page 2

Floods upon which we kids would boat, a beat-up bandstand to play tag, a brook used for "I dare you," a World War I cannon we climbed, underground tunnels with giant rats, a stone bridge under which frogs went to die (it smelled like that), the scary Dead Man's Bushes (a guy died there in 1950), open areas for pick-up baseball and football, giant trees to climb and hang upside down, and a big place for excellent capture-the-flag after dark: all these things made the Park a wondrous place for kids who grew up

Editor's Note: This week, The Townsman welcomes back longtime columnist Bill Dalton to its pages. Dalton, who started writing for The Townsman in 2003, has been on hiatus the past several months while he co-authored "Legendary Locals of Andover" with his wife, Katharine. The book will be released Nov. 18.

Dalton has served as Andover's town moderator, a selectman and a Planning Board member. He was the chairman of the Massachusetts Commission of Labor Relations and also was the chief counsel of the American Cancer Society, working in Atlanta and Austin for 13 years.

In the 1980s, he wrote a column for The Eagle-Tribune, The Townsman's sister paper, and published a collection of his columns called Local Touch in 1986. UMass published his "Public Sector Labor Relations" in 1996.

in the mid-century decades.

Yet, adults didn't use the Park before World War II except for Sunday afternoons when the Andover Brass Band played. I grew up next to the Park, and from as early as I can remember (about 1948) until the town fixed the Park in the mid-1980s, the Park was hardly used by anyone but kids. Even the annual Clown Town was aimed in our direction.

The Park's bandstand was constructed for $500 in 1913, nine years after the Park was built. It was made of the same common fieldstone — no doubt from a local wall — as the 1906 stone bridge. Compared to most bandstands, ornate and built in Victorian times, our post-Victorian bandstand is plain vanilla, made more architecturally boring by our pragmatic, early 20thcentury citizens, who built it to double as a toolshed. By 1948, vandals had smashed the bandstand's stairs, dug fieldstone from the façade, and caused the place where the band once played to smell like the men's room in a rough bar.

Yet, the gravel paths, the stone bridge, Rogers Brook, numerous bushes, and the trees that survived the hurricanes of 1938 and 1954 lent the Park a decent appearance, even though most citizens used the Park only with their eyes as they drove by. But even some of that view diminished with the death of the brook. It aggravated neighbors by flooding too many times; so, in 1968, draconian Andover executed and buried the brook, which caused the stone bridge to become an amusing, but pretty, bridge to nowhere.

After my childhood, even the Park's reputation was hurt. In the 1970s and early '80s, hoodlums with big mouths and loud cars parked at twilight along Whittier Street near the bandstand. (Back then, Whittier went through to Bartlett (historically spelled with two Ts on the end). The punks got high, traded illegal substances, and were loathsome. Finally, a young man was dragged to times to reflect on our his death beneath a car, and this dispersed the meetings for good.

In 1984, the story becomes more pleasant. As part of the project that renovated the Town Hall and created the new town offices, the Park was turned into a beautiful place.

Making it even better, nine years ago, veterans' memorials began to be added. It's a *columnist for The Towns*wonderful place for them, for man. His email is BillDalthe Park offers both peaceful ton@AndoverTownie.com.

The goal of the future should be for the Park to continue to bring the whole community together, for that is the spirit for which public parks are made and maintained.

Next steps for youth center, charter school plan

andovertownsman.com

October begins with the advancement of two projects that have a lot at stake for the town's youths.

By next week, the construction bid should be awarded to allow the long-awaited Cormier Youth Center adjacent to Doherty Middle School to break ground. That is, unless another obstacle juts out into its path.

For a project that has literally been in the works for 15-plus years, an obstacle isn't inconceivable.

Just this week, an agreement between the Board of Selectmen and Andover Youth Foundation had to be resigned because of a typo in a funding amount. But hurdles like that — big and small — have been par for the course for the project.

The cost and financing of the youth center which went from an initial intention of being a private endeavor to becoming a private-public partnership in more recent years — continues to remain a source of discussion and question.

Indeed, some in town have not supported spend-

The fact of the matter is the forces behind the youth center have proven they are committed to seeing this project through — and it's time to allow them to finally see this center take shape.

ing more than $5 million on a place for the town's youths to gather and grow. Broadening the center's focus to include opportunities for the town's seniors to share the space did little to change those naysayers' minds. But an overwhelming majority of townspeople have shown their support for creating a home for local vouths — to give Andover Youth Services Director Bill Fahey a proper facility in which to showcase his successful array of programs.

One can argue the scope of the project is too big. One can even argue need vs. desire. But the fact of the matter is the forces behind the youth center have proven they are committed to seeing this project through — and it's time to allow them to finally see this center take shape.

Last week, the proponents behind the STEAM Studio charter high school learned they have cleared their first hurdle when they received the go-ahead to submit a formal proposal to the state.

The project, led by School Committee member David Birnbach, has been met with considerable opposition since it was first announced this summer — even before real details have been shared.

For some, the fear is that a charter high school may perhaps weaken Andover High School in some way, taking away critical funding and high-caliber students interested in STEAM Studio's core curriculum of science and technology.

The matter has been further clouded by the dual role of Birnbach, who continues to maintain his right to serve on the School Committee while also actively pursuing the creation of a charter high school in town. But whether or not Birnbach can wear both hats shouldn't be the main focus of the discussion. The real heart of the matter is whether a charter school can have some benefit for Andover's students. Already, many high-schoolers in town pursue a private education at one of the highly regarded schools in our midst. A charter school could afford one more, albeit public, option. Charter schools elsewhere have proven themselves successful, operating as complementary to the existing public schools, but providing a niche education that otherwise could not be obtained.

Retirees' healthcare far from free

Editor, Townsman:

I'm not sure what the town manager was talking about when he says that Andover offers retirees "free healthcare for life." About four years ago, Town Meeting voted to transfer all retirees from the town group healthcare insurance plan to Medicare. And that isn't free. Every three months, I receive a bill from the Medicare Premium Collection Center in St. Louis, Mo. What the town does offer its former employees is supplemental healthcare insurance, which covers services not covered by Medicare. It is an opportunity to stay in a group plan, which is cheaper than an individual plan. But that isn't free either. That amount comes directly off my monthly pension check. So before the town manager tries to sell another program, he should check what is really happening now. FLORENCE FELDMAN-WOOD

If I disagreed with an editorial and felt so troubled to write to the paper, I would say I disagreed with the editorial and here are my reasons. I wouldn't pronounce that "US," as he puts it, felt that the editorial was unfair or not to our liking. Who is "US?" It would have been better if the writer concluded his article by listing the names of those that he refers to as "US." Is it a committee, club, an organization, group? Regarding that obsolete cannon from World War I or later. The writer feels it is a bad influence on the voungsters that may travel through this very pleasant park that sits next to the town offices and old Punchard High School. I certainly don't want to upset them or hide from them these relics of the past and their importance. It might be advantageous for the young people of Andover to learn that if it wasn't for cannons like that and the men to use them, maybe we wouldn't be that free to walk through a peaceful park like this. I feel hiding this away somewhere as to not upset our children would only deny that these relics exist and why they do even today. QUESTION

On a scale of one to five, release of MCAS scores, how concerned are you about the current government shutdown? 1: I'm not worried at all about this.

2: I'm mildly worried about what's going on. 3: I'm concerned, but not freaking out - yet. 4: I'm very concerned about the shutdown. 5: I'm incredibly upset about this. LAST WEEK'S QUESTION

Last week, we asked our voters, "with last week's what do you think of the statewide, standardized test?" With 44 responses, the answers were: It's a good way to keep schools and teachers accountable: 15 votes, 34.09 percent. It's a meaningless test and should be scrapped: 15 votes, 34.09 percent. It's a good way to measure student progress: 14 votes, 31.82 percent. It's too hard: zero votes.

Cannon should remain Take advantage of Park fixture

Editor, Townsman:

While I agree with Mr. Rogers ("Canon no longer belongs in town's Park," Sept. 25) about war being a terrible thing, I could not disagree more in regards to the cannon. To me, that cannon represents generations of Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice in order to preserve my freedoms and liberty.

That cannon rightfully belongs in a prominent place to remind us every day of those sacrifices. Even more important, as far as I am concerned, is the lack of understanding in regards to war memorials and history. I have heard far too many times that

Saturday's MBTA recycling event Editor, Townsman:

I urge all readers to take advantage of the MBTA Community Recycling Event this Saturday, Oct. 5, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Brickstone Square parking lot off York Street in Andover, as described last week in the Townsman.

It is a phenomenal, one-stop opportunity to quickly and easily recycle for free (fees only for TVs and computer monitors) many larger household items and materials that you can't typically recycle or simply responsibly get rid of easily or cost-effectively.

Editor, Townsman:

I read in the Townsman that two writers were disturbed by either the self-interpreted politics of the editorial ("Editorial did no reflect community," Sept. 25), while the other on the removal of the instruments of death and destruction from one of our parks ("Canon no longer belongs in town's Park," Sept. 25). One writer felt that the editorial made those of "US" question if the paper still

Comedy Night laughs with Rotary Club

The Rotary Club of Andover's third annual Comedy Night fundraiser is quickly approaching. The laughs roll out on Friday, Oct. 11, starting at 7 p.m. at the Wyndham Hotel, 123 Old River Road, Andover.

Dave Rattigan will host the bill that spotlights three sought-after comedians — Tony V., Kelly MacFarland and Steve Macone.

Tony V. appeared in the 2013 Sandra Bullock comedy "The Heat" as well as the 2012 films "The Love Guru" and "God Bless America," plus the web series "Boston Taps." He has made numerous television appearances and hosts the WEEI Whiney Awards.

MacFarland is known to captivate audiences with her charm, unique point of view and surprising candor. Along with performing standup in clubs, at colleges and at theaters, she has been featured on Comedy Central's "Premium Blend" and the TV Guide Channel's "Stand Up in Stilettos."

Macone writes for the satirical website The Onion and is a headlining comedian at colleges around the East Coast. He's been a finalist in the stand-up contest at the Boston Comedy Festival.

Rattigan has had comedy clips featured on Nickmom. com and ULive.com and has re-released his CD "Dave Rattigan: Thinks He's Funny," which has had air play on several radio stations. A comedian, writer and producer, he is the co-creator of the themed stand-up show. "How Men Think (Or Do They?)." Tickets are $25: a cash bar

Tickets are $25; a cash bar will be available and finger foods will be provided. Proceeds will support the Rotary Club's community grants programs. For tickets or more information, visit www.rotaryandover.org.

On to the finals MV Idol picks top 10 singers

Ten of the area's most promising vocalists will face off next month for the title of Merrimack Valley Idol.

The finalists were selected at auditions last week at the Collins Center at Andover High School, winning the judges' praise and a chance to advance to the finals, set for Saturday, Nov. 9.

They are: Emma Harris of Andover, Jillian Knopping of North Andover, Nurilys Cintron and Anna McCabe of Lawrence, Jamie Dyan Taker of Haverhill, Dakota Driscoll of Dunstable, Josef Nocera of Newburyport and Heather Alfano and Megan Lally of Salem, N.H.

They will be competing for a $500 cash prize and the chance to follow on the path of 2012 winner Ilia Paulino of Lawrence.

The audition judges were theater producer and director Mike Fay of Hampton Beach, N.H.; Rebecca Farnham of Lowell, opera director for the Andover-based Treble Chorus of New England; and Elizabeth Sarantos of Andover who performs with the New England Classical Singers of Andover. The annual competition, open to singers ages 14 and up from the Merrimack Valley, is presented by Quota International of Andover.

The finals will be held at the Wyndham Andover Hotel and will include dinner with cash bar, silent and live auctions and a raffle.

Proceeds from the event will assist the 20-year-old returns to the area as a pair of talented pianists with world-class pedigrees share a local Steinway in a free concert on Sunday.

Pianists Esther Ning-Yau and Eleanor Perrone, a former Phillips Academy teacher, will perform a program of duets, doubling the fun for listeners who will be treated to the four-hand piano concert at Lawrence Public Library, 51 Lawrence St., Lawrence.

The concert starts at 2 p.m. and is part of an ongoing series orchestrated by Terri and George Kelley of Andover.

Four-hand piano might sound more like a poker term, but it's actually a popular music style practiced by many piano teachers. Ning-Yau and Perrone will share the same piano bench and black-and-white keys to demonstrate the technique.

"It's energetic and crowds love it," Terri Kelley said of the four-hand style, adding a similar concert featuring a different set of pianists that was hosted by her group last year was well-received.

Sunday's program includes ballet music from Gluck's "Orpheus and Eurydice," six pieces by Rachmaninoff and three short pieces by Gottschalk.

"All of the music is charming and filled with beautiful melodies," Kelley said.

Perrone, who trained at Julliard School of Music, has an international resume that includes performances from Brazil to the Merrimack Valley, with appearances with the Boston Pops, Orquestra Sinfonica de Campinas and Billings Symphony.

them to familiar ones. She has a Master of Music degree from Boston University, is on the faculty of Longy School of Music of Bard College in Cambridge and also teaches privately and is an adjunct faculty member at Concord Academy in Concord. She formerly taught piano at Phillips Academy.

A native of Hong Kong and an avid chamber musician, Ning-Yau is also internationally known. She has appeared in recitals from Puerto Rico to Germany and performs frequently throughout New England. She holds a double master's degree in piano performance and collaborative piano from New England Conservatory of Music.

Ning-Yau is a faculty member at Longy and the Preparatory and Continuing Education school at the New England Conservatory. She is a staff accompanist at the Boston Conservatory and the Meadowmount School of Music in New York.

The concert is being presented in memory of Elizabeth Caesar, a devoted supporter who had a special place in the audience for the series. Caeser's family generously donated to the series, and the music was selected with her and her family in mind, Kelley said. The performance is funded by the Catherine McCarthy Memorial Trust Fund in Andover and will last about one hour. A reception will follow.

A focus on food and faces for library shows

October's featured artists at Memorial Hall Library may both be portrait artists, but their subjects couldn't be more different.

Steve DiFranza of Reading, who is showing his paintings in the first-floor exhibit area, is a successful artist who captures the human form, while Meg O'Hanlon of Andover, whose work fills the secondfloor display case, directs her watercolors at depictions of food and recipe illustrations.

DiFranza graduated from the Vesper George School of Art in Boston in 1950. After a tour of duty with the U.S. Army Signal Corps in Korea, he entered the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston in 1952. He completed a double major in graphic design and painting in 1956 and went on to teach drawing and design at the Museum School. Vivekananda, who lived in the second half of the 19th century, is considered one of India's greatest patriots and spiritual leaders. Through his travels and lectures, he is said to have awakened minds to their cultural heritage.

The competition for equestrians with special needs is named after the late Barbara DeNitto of North Andover who, along with Ironstone's executive director, Deedee O'Brien, brought Special Olympics equestrian sports to Massachusetts in the 1980s.

Ironstone Farm is in the Special Olympics Hall of Fame, and DeNitto was honored with the Special Olympics' Lifetime Achievement Award.

During the opening ceremony on Sunday, one of DeNitto's former riding students, Meredith Leonard of Tewksbury, was surprised with the Barbara DeNitto Good Sportsmanship Award given for "courage, integrity and character." It honors DeNitto, who died in 2010 after battling cancer.

Leonard wiped away tears after she was presented with the award by DeNitto's husband, Nick.

Later, she took first place in both competitions for her division.

Ironstone Farm's staff say they intend to continue the memorial horse show annually for DeNitto as "a tribute to a special teacher, a friend to all her students and a mentor who we will honor for many years to come."

The farm at 450 Lowell St. provides traditional therapies using horses as well as recreational riding programs. For more, visit www.ironstonefarm. org.

A bonanza for book-lovers

The Friends of Memorial Hall Library's book sales have become not-to-bemissed events for anyone who still values the old-fashioned art of page-turning.

The crowds were brisk at the three-day sale, which kicked off with an additional members-only preview for library friends.

The next sale will be a special one-day holiday event on Dec. 7. The winter sale is set for Jan. 24 through 26, so mark your calendars.

Sinking her dream Andover native earns her LPGA Tour card

Of course, she wanted to play on the LPGA Tour.

Well, her dream has come true. Sweeney finished 10th in the money list as the Symetra Tour came to a finish on Sunday.

And guess what? The top 10 women earn an exemption as a full-time LPGA player in 2014.

"I am very excited," the 24-year-old Sweeney said. "It's what I've always dreamed of doing, playing golf as a professional at the highest level."

Sweeney, who was a three- realize I can't do this fortime finalist in the Ladies Allan B. Rogers Memorial Golf Tournament, entered the weekend in 10th place and shot rounds of 70, 73, 73 and 72 to finish even-par, and 10th overall to claim her card.

It was a tough sell on her parents, but they relented, with her mother, Della, moving down with her.

MAKING HER MARK

Colleen Caveney follows through on a shot for Andover High. The lone girl on the Golden Warriors varsity golf team, Caveney is undefeated at 5-0-1 individually.

Caveney at home as only girl on Andover golf team

BY DAVID WILLIS

dwillis@andovertownsman.com

Facing off against the guys on the golf course has never intimidated Colleen Caveney.

Growing up with four big brothers, all avid golfers, Caveney learned the game competing against her siblings.

So what is there to fear against a Merrimack Valley Conference foe, even if he is a male?

"It doesn't bother me at all," said Caveney, a junior at Andover High. "It doesn't worry me. And beating them, I admit, is pretty fun."

The long girl on the Andover High varsity golf team, Caveney is off to a red-hot start, compiling a 5-0-1 individual record for the Golden Warriors this season, all against male opponents. "Colleen is doing a great job for us this season," first-year Warriors coach David Fazio said. "She has really stepped up and played really well." Golf was a part of Caveney's life from the time she could walk.

"It's the first vacation I've taken off from golf in a long, long time," she said.

She is currently working toward her college degree in communications at Arizona State, and will be actually won it two more times after that. I still have the trophies next to my desk. That was when I started to think more about taking golf seriously. I got my own membership to Andover Country Club and started to really enjoy it."

Caveney's breakthrough came at age 12, when she took home her first trophy.

As a freshman, Caveney played for the JV team at Andover, then did not go out for the school team as a sophomore.

"I was really only average as a freshman," she said. "And I wanted to focus more on basketball my sophomore year. I didn't feel like I could dedicate the time to golf."

Last winter, Caveney emerged as a key member of the Golden Warriors basketball team, which also featured her cousin, 1,000-point scorer Devon Caveney.

Colleen averaged 5.1 points a game as a guard for the Warriors, which finished 18-7 and advanced to the Division 1 North semifinals.

It was then that her basketball connections helped lead her back to play for the Andover golf team.

"I have known coach Faz for years," Caveney said. "I always went to his basketball camp (Hooptown) growing up and I coached at it this year. He was also my gym teacher, and I knew his daughter (former standout guard and current UConn lacrosse player) Ally through basketball. I was excited to have Faz coach, and I talked to (assistant basketball coach Carol) Martini, too, and she encouraged me to go for the team."

Prior to team tryouts, Caveney fired the round of her life, shooting a 40 over nine holes at Renaissance Golf Club in Haverhill.

"That was probably the best I have ever played,"

66 I also want to break 40 by the end of the season. That would be awesome?? Colleen Caveney she said. "Maybe I shot a 41 before at Andover (Country Club). But I still wasn't totally sure I was going to make the team. But coach Faz's encouragement gave me confidence." Caveney not only made the varsity team, she quickly began contributing to the team from the No. 8 spot in the lineup. She opened her season with a victory over Methuen, and has kept it up to the 5-0-1 mark, including victories in each of their last two matches.

"I didn't even know if I would be playing much this year," she said. "It's been a lot of fun. I use a lot of the lessons I learned from my father, who still plays a lot. Things like course management and how to hit in certain situations.

"I don't know if it is like basketball, but it helps to be an athlete. Look at (Andover basketball legend and current Boston College sharpshooter) Nicole Boudreau. She could go out and shoot a great round of golf without even practicing because she is a great athlete. And the guys on the team are terrific to play with."

With seven matches left on the schedule and basketball season lingering after, Caveney hopes to finish the fall up in style.

"I want to step up," she said. "We have three meets this week, so I would like a few big days and help the team win.

"I also want to break 40 by the end of the season. That would be awesome."

Despite team spirit, AHS falls short in Thanksgiving preview

The good news for Andover football is that the Golden Warriors will have another shot at archrival Central Catholic in their traditional Thanksgiving Day showdown.

The bad news for the Warriors is that Round 1 of the match-up did not finish so well.

Taking on their Turkey Day rivals in a non-holiday match-up for the first time in 41 years, due to the postseason realignment, the Golden Warriors struggled with offensive consistency last Friday, falling to Central Catholic, the No. 8 team in Eastern Mass., 26-7..
