In mourning

A time of grief and memories for an 'amazing person'

In countless ways big and small, Colleen Ritzer of Andover, a teacher in Danvers, was remembered over the past week by those who knew her and many more who didn't but wish they had.

At Fenway Park during the opening game of the World Series between the Boston Red Sox and the St. Louis Cardinals last Wednesday night, a moment of silence was held in Ritzer's honor while the giant scoreboard flashed a smiling image of Ritzer, the name of her hometown, and the age she died: 24.

The procession passed a sea of Ritzer's teaching colleagues and education leaders from both her hometown of Andover and her teaching community of Danvers, who stood four and five deep as they lined the church stairways on either side.

At 9:50 a.m. Monday, the bells of St. Augustine Church rang out as Colleen Ritzer's mother, father, sister and brother, joined by the Rev. Peter Gori, climbed the center granite steps to the sanctuary.

They were among the upward of 1,000 mourners — including about 400 students from Danvers High School where the beloved 24-year-old math teacher was slain last week — who joined together to tearfully remember a young woman who was described as an angel to many.

Together, they followed a mahogany casket, escorted by Ritzer's cousins serving as pallbearers, into the Essex Street church that has served as the family's spiritual home for three generations.

Berberian storms selectmen's meeting

Bancroft Road resident says town's water supply tainted

people, some standing in the hallway outside the third floor conference room at Town Hall, looked on. "This report shows exposure and significant risk to the residents of Andover."

James Berberian, of 2-4 Bancroft Road, went before the Board of Selectmen Monday night in an attempt to speak to town officials about what he said was a potential public health problem on his property and possibly in town water.

As he held up a report done by a contractor working for the town, Berberian was gaveled out of order by the chairman as Town Manager Buzz Stapeczynski attempted to talk over him and drown out his words.

"Are you aware of this report?" Berberian asked repeatedly. Selectmen ignored him and Stapeczynski continued to speak about the item that was on the Eventually, one of the Selectmen called police and Berberian was told to stop speaking. Two officers showed up.

"They tried to shut me down and called the cops," Berberian said. "I wanted to talk about the issues with Selectmen."

Selectmen Chairman Alex Vispoli explained that Berberian couldn't speak because last night's meeting was a one-item agenda to discuss changes to the contract between Selectmen and the Andover Youth Foundation over financing of the teen center.

Berberian and others asked at the end of the meeting if the matter could be placed on the agenda for next week's meeting. Vispoli said that was possible, but not guaranteed.

Several people gathered in the hallway after the meeting said they were there to get answers and to support Berberian.

"There is arsenic in the water supply and it was dumped near two schools,"

Motive remains unclear in Ritzer murder

NEWS STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

It started with an all-too-common request that happens every day in every school all over the world: A teacher asking a student to stay after class for extra help.

But in this case, police say, that request led to the death of a young, popular teacher at the hands of one of her students.

On Tuesday, Oct. 22, according to police, Colleen Ritzer of Andover asked Philip Chism, 14, of Danvers, to stay after class to get extra help in math.

While details remain sketchy because police records and court documents in the case have been sealed, it is evident from security cameras recovered from the high school that at some point, Ritzer went to the bathroom. She was followed five minutes later by Chism.

Police, responding to a missing-persons report on Ritzer, went to the school and found blood in the second-floor bathroom. Security footage and interviews with the suspect led police to recover her body in woods outside the school.

"It is apparent she was a homicide victim," said Essex County District Attorney Jonathan Blodgett at a press conference the morning of Wednesday, Oct. 23.

It is known that investigators have searched Chism's home. Law enforcement sources familiar with the case have provided some details, including that a box cutter was the apparent weapon.

Last Wednesday, Chism had a plea of not guilty entered on his behalf in the death of Ritzer. Salem District Court Judge Matthew Nestor ordered Chism held without bail, pending a probable cause hearing Nov. 22.

Court documents released after the hearing offer few new details, and do not confirm exactly how Ritzer was killed. The documents offer no motive for the slaying.

Defense lawyer Denise Regan filed a motion seeking funds for a mental health evaluation of Chism.

People who knew Chism said he was a quiet kid. They said he was a soccer player and a skateboarder, and a newcomer to town who had moved here over the summer from Tennessee.

In his few months in town, Chism had made a mark as a top player on the junior varsity soccer team.

If he was troubled, it wasn't readily apparent to those at school.

Jean McCartin, a Danvers School Committee member, said the school has extensive programs to help ease the transition for new students like Chism. She said there was no information about Chism that would have raised any red flags.

"He just presented himself to us like any other student would," McCartin said. "And that's what I think is so hard for the administration right now. You know, their hearts are breaking because they just didn't know he was in need, if he was in need. ... No one knows why he would have behaved in this way and done such a terrible thing."

A school official in Clarksville, Tenn., a city of about 140,000 about 50 miles northwest of Nashville, said Chism attended Rossview Middle School for three years and graduated eighth grade last May. He attended school in Boca Raton, Fla., in fifth grade, and Burt Elementary School in Clarksville in fourth grade, said Elsie Shelton, chief communications officer for the Clarksville-Montgomery County School System.

Chis's father is in the military.

Mark Nolan coached Chism on a travel soccer team in Clarksville for two years.

He said Chism was very passionate about the game, which he dove into out of admiration for a relative who played soccer professionally in Brazil. "He was there more than just to kick a ball," Nolan said. "Some of the kids were there because mom and dad made them, but not him."

In Danvers, he distinguished himself on the JV team as a leading scorer.

FUNERAL

now," Gori told the congregation in opening his homily for Ritzer's funeral Mass.

The 525-seat main church was filled to capacity, with many donning pink ribbons, scarves and other items in honor of Ritzer's favorite color.

Below them, the Danvers High students, who arrived at the funeral with their teachers in one dozen school buses, listened to an audio stream of the Mass from the church basement.

So many were gathered upstairs, members of the Danvers Honor Guard who saw Ritzer's family and loved ones to and from St. Augustine were pressed against the church's front doors.

"It was a tremendous testimony to who Colleen is," the Rev. Dennis Gallagher, vice president of admissions at Assumption College in Worcester, where Ritzer earned her undergraduate degree, said after the Mass. "So many generations of people, from elderly to all the students downstairs, who were touched by a life that was, altogether, too short."

Inside the church, cousin Gina McDaniel described Ritzer as the daughter who every parent hopes their child will become when they grow up. She said Ritzer's love for teaching was second only to her love for her family.

"Her heart and soul were encompassed in her family," McDaniel said.

But it was teaching where Ritzer especially shined, McDaniel said, becoming a mentor to her students in just the first few years of her career. McDaniel said the effect her cousin had can be seen in how people have bonded together to commemorate and celebrate her life.

"(She) made people feel loved, comforted and optimistic," McDaniel said. "Colleen's grace made her life fulfilling. In such a short period of time, one person has made a world of difference."

Fr. Gori's homily highlighted Ritzer's inclination "to see the good in people, especially her students," Gori said. "She enjoyed them and respected them; she cared about them and she cared for them; she loved them."

In addition to Gallagher, the visiting clergy included Bishop Peter Uglietto of the North Region of the Archdiocese of Boston, where Danvers High School is located. He represented the sympathy of Cardinal Sean O'Malley.

"To say that there's a lot of heartache in that church right now is an understatement," Terry Donilon, spokesman for the Archdiocese of Boston, told the bevy of media, who watched from outside the church at the request of the family. "But we call it a celebration of life, and that's what this will be."

Other speakers included Ritzer's best friend since childhood, Jennifer Berger, who did one of the readings, and her mentor, Laura Fogerty, who provided the universal prayer. The responsorial psalm, Psalm 42, had the congregation repeating, "My soul is thirsting for the living God; when shall I see him face to face?" Her aunts made the presentation of offerings for the full Catholic Mass.

As Gori offered his final prayer, the congregation stood for the song of farewell.

About 11:20 a.m., the front doors to St. Augustine opened again and the church bells began to ring. Gori and six other priests and religious leaders in white vestments quietly filed down the front center steps. They stopped midway, lining up on either side.

Hundreds of Danvers High students, many with their arms around each other's shoulders and hands clasped together, began pouring out of a side door and stood at attention as they lined the sidewalk to the left of the church. Ritzer's teaching colleagues reemerged and once again filled the church's two side stairways.

Eight minutes later, Ritzer's cousins accompanied her casket down the church steps to the awaiting hearse.

As the recessional hymn, "Let There Be Peace on Earth," was sung, her distraught family — father Tom, mother Peggie, brother Daniel and sister Laura — made their way behind it.

The church bells continued ringing for almost 20 minutes, as Ritzer's family and friends filed out and took their places to the right of the church. They rang as the last of the floral arrangements were loaded into the hearse and Gori walked down the church steps alone, taking a seat in the hearse.

And they continued ringing as the mourners stood in stoic silence and sympathy as a motorcade of Ritzer's immediate family and close relatives and friends slowly began the less than 2-mile journey to Spring Grove Cemetery on Abbot Street for a private burial.

"Heaven stole an angel from us today," McDaniel told the congregation in the closing words of her remembrance. "You will always be in our hearts; we love you, rest in peace."

A legacy ensured. To carry on the legacy of Colleen Ritzer and her passion for teaching, the Ritzer family has established the Colleen Ritzer Memorial Scholarship Fund. The scholarship will be awarded to students who are pursuing a degree in education so they can continue her legacy of making a difference in a student's life.

To make a donation to the fund, make a check payable to ECCF/Colleen Ritzer Fund and mail it to Essex County Community Foundation, 175 Andover St., Danvers, 01923.

Bucuzzo to stay on as assistant town manager

By BILL KIRK

bkirk@andovertownsmen.com

Assistant Town Manager Steve Bucuzzo is staying in Andover after all.

Bucuzzo had been offered a job as town manager of Dracut, pending successful negotiations with the Board of Selectmen over a contract.

But after six weeks of talking, the Dracut board voted last Tuesday to terminate negotiations due to a disagreement over wording in his contract.

"I will be remaining in Andover for the foreseeable future," Bucuzzo said in an email to The Andover Townsman.

Town Manager Reginald 'Buzz' Stapczynski said that while Bucuzzo was chosen by the Dracut Board of Selectmen to be their next town manager nearly two months ago, he never gave his resignation notice to Andover, just in case contract talks broke down.

The news of the breakdown in negotiations came as a shock to selectmen as well as Stapczynski, as they were already making plans for to rework the assistant town manager's role to take some of the day-to-day responsibility of running town government off the town manager's shoulders.

"That was a professional opportunity for him to advance in his career," said Selectman Mary Lyman. "I was surprised it fell through."

Selectman Paul Salafia agreed.

"I thought it was going along very well," he said. "I was very, very shocked and surprised."

Stapczynski said he had "mixed emotions" about Dracut's decision to end negotiations.

"I was happy for him that he was offered the town manager's job," Stapczynski said. "He was appointed and given the opportunity to work there. It's a good community and it has a good reputation. But it didn't work out and I look forward to working with him."

The question now,

however, is whether Bucuzzo's job will be reconfigured to address some of the issues raised by members of the Board of Selectmen over the last couple months when they thought he was leaving.

Soon after it was announced in August that Bucuzzo, of Haverhill, was heading to Dracut, members of the board said they wanted to take another look at the job, which pays about $125,000.

At a special meeting in October, the board went over the job description and provided input to Stapczynski and Human Resources Director Candace Hall about how the position should be handled in the future.

They said that Stapczynski was overworked and should have some of his duties shifted to the assistant town manager.

"We need to reduce your direct reports," Selectman

Chairman Alex Vispoli told Stapczynski, suggesting that the new assistant town manager could take over Andover Youth Services and Community Development and Planning. Other Selectmen mentioned that the new assistant could take over management of the Punchard (Senior) Center.

Yesterday, however, Vispoli appeared to back off those recommendations. "I don't have a comment," Vispoli said. "It's something we'd talk to the town manager about. It's not something that's been brought to our attention."

Bucuzzo himself acknowledged that this may be a good time to take another look at the position.

STEAM Studio files with state

An application for an Andover-based charter school proposal has been filed, moving the pitch on to the state for a February decision deadline.

STEAM Studio, a 450-student charter school being proposed by a number of area residents including School Committee member David Birnbach, was one of several proposals that were filed with the state last week, according to Birnbach.

The application, which is more than 150 pages in length, will soon be available for review on the state Department of Education website in the coming days, Birnbach said.

Ritzer's legacy: Live with purpose and joy

Rabbi Robert S. Goldstein
Temple Emanuel, Andover

Andover is a small town and the death of our neighbor, Colleen Ritzer, has left us all bewildered and bereft. She had everything going for her. Colleen was a promising young teacher, committed to her calling and devoted to her students. She was a loving daughter who made her parents proud. She was a role model for her younger siblings and a loyal friend whose natural goodness and optimism made her a sought-after companion. As a father and as a rabbi, I find myself returning to the same question: How can we live in a world so chaotic that tragedies like this can occur? The rabbis of old suggested that everyone should hold on to two phrases — one in each pocket. On one piece of paper words spoken by Abraham in the Book of Genesis, "I am but dust and ashes." And on the other, a verse from the Talmud, "For my sake alone, was the entire world created." Abraham who faced more than his share of tests and trials understood that we are all on the same journey with the same destiny and none of us can be certain about the length of our earthly sojourn. The Talmudic author saw life as majestic and magnificent, with unlimited possibilities for human greatness. Each of us is endowed with insight and intelligence, a sense of wonder, and the potential, if we choose, to act with nobility and generosity. Because life is finite does not mean we should live in a constant state of fear and foreboding. But neither should we misuse our time on this good earth. We need to nurture our relationships with our loved ones and friends, find meaningful work, and live with purpose and joy. Colleen Ritzer was a daughter all of us would be proud to claim as our own.

Her death is simply inexplicable and tragic. But as her pastor, the Rev. Peter Gori observed, "She touched the lives of more people than a typical 24-year-old." Colleen loved being a teacher and her most lasting lesson to us all was the example of her own life. She spent her time wisely, lived every day to its fullest and most importantly, she recognized what so many others never see: the divine spark that glows within every human soul. This was her greatest gift to us all, and her lasting legacy. May she rest in peace.

Retired teacher: 'Stop this violence'

BY DUSTIN LUCA
DLUCA@ANDOVERTOWNSMAN.COM
As the community mourned the loss of Colleen Ritzer this week, her former Andover High School production teacher called for her story to lead efforts for ending school violence. Joe Spanos, a retired Andover High School marketing and business teacher, became a frequent voice in the sorrow of the past week, urging the community to not let Ritzer die in vain. "The most non-violent person gets attacked in the most violent way," Spanos said outside St. Augustine Church in Andover following Ritzer's funeral Mass Monday morning. "We've got to stop the violence — and make Colleen Ritzer the poster child for that." Spanos started teaching in Andover in 1978 and retired in 2011 — but not before coming to know Ritzer on a personal level prior to her graduation in 2007. On top of giving her an award for Excellence in TV Production, he also worked with her for three years at a family-owned convenience store.

"To lose her at 24 years old, that's a crime. It's time to really come together and stop this violence."
Joe Spanos, retired Andover High marketing and business teacher

"She lit up the room," Spanos said. "I'd say, 'Turn the lights off! Colleen is here. Save the power.'" When Spanos heard the news of her death, "I cried," he said. "She was a great student. ... She always wanted to be a teacher." He said it was nor surprising for people to turn out by the hundreds — including the busloads of her students and teaching colleagues at Danvers High School. "You'd expect this for Colleen," Spanos said. "Absolutely expect it. We're just all shattered here. ... Our lives are shattered — can you imagine the immediate family?" Spanos praised the Ritzer family for raising three wonderful children, including Ritzer's younger brother, Dan, and sister, Laura. "The Ritzer family did it right.

They brought their kids up the way we should bring them up. (Colleen) was the salt of the earth. She was an angel," Spanos said. "We, as a family, need to look at our children, look in our households, get them help. To have her go down this way is unconscionable." The shock of Ritzer's murder will wear off in time, Spanos said, "and you have to come to grips with what happened." "To lose her at 24 years old, that's a crime," he said. "It's time to really come together and stop this violence."

'Born to be a teacher'

The Rev. Peter G. Gori, OSA
St. Augustine Parish, Andover

The Rev. Peter G. Gori, O.S.A., pastor of St. Augustine Church in Andover, delivered this homily at Colleen Ritzer's funeral Monday morning. Here are excerpts from his homily: In the face of great tragedy, we are shocked and horrified. We are naturally inclined to ask, "Why?" It is immensely frustrating when, like now, there is no satisfactory answer to that question. This makes it hurt even more. We have names for a death like Colleen's, words that burn our lips. Yet, no amount of evidence or facts can ever justify it or explain it, and that too hurts. From deep within each of us comes the same cry, "This should not happen!" Not to Colleen; not to anyone. I will try to follow Colleen's good example as a math teacher, who may suggest that a problem be approached from a different way to seek the solution. Perhaps we should ask not "Why or even how she died?" but rather "Why and how did she live?" When I ask that question, the answer comes into view. Colleen's life was short. Twenty-four years is not a very long time, by anyone's measurement. And yet, in that time that was hers, she showed herself to be a beloved daughter and granddaughter, a delightful sister, niece and cousin, a really good friend and student, and not least of all, a truly wonderful teacher. As a teacher, she fulfilled a desire and her dream and she did so with great joy and talent. Everyone would agree that Colleen was born to be a teacher. Indeed, she lived for it. ... Colleen was inclined to see the good in people, especially her students. She enjoyed them and respected them; she cared about them and she cared for them; she loved them. She helped them see the good in themselves too. She helped them to see and to realize their potential. How often does a math teacher encounter frustration in her students when they just can't "get it" and they want to give up? A good teacher won't give up on them or let them give up on themselves. She will give them the encouragement to keep trying, together. Colleen taught so much more than just math! For Colleen, being a teacher was not just a job or a career. It was a calling, or as we say, a vocation. Years ago, she must have heard the question that is posed on this banner here, "God has blessed me in unique ways. How should I use my gifts to serve Him?" Colleen knew the answer and she gave it. Not everyone learns to see the good in others. Sadly, not everyone is taught to do so in their home or experience. It is one of those lessons that is difficult to teach yourself. You need others to show you how. To master any important lesson requires work, practice and patience, on the part of the teacher and the student. In addition to learning from Jesus the Teacher, Colleen had the great blessing of her parents and family who taught her so very well. There, within her family, she learned to love God, love her neighbor, love life itself and to see the good in others. ... As we struggle with our questions today, tonight and tomorrow, let us not hesitate to ask the Teacher for extra help. He helps us to see that a good life and a long life are not necessarily the same thing. He teaches us to see the good in ourselves and in one another, because we are created in God's own image and likeness. He shows us how to be selfless. He teaches us to be grateful for it all. There is a beautiful chapel at the Pastoral Center of the Archdiocese of Boston. Over the altar there is an inscription which reads, "Come, the Teacher is calling you." I am confident that those were the words Colleen heard when she entered Eternal Life.

Words of remembrance: 'So much life in a smile'

BY GINA MCDANIEL
Colleen Ritzer's cousin, Gina McDonald, delivered the Words of Remembrance at her funeral Monday. Here are excerpts from her reading.
"No matter what happens in life, be good to people. Being good to people is a wonderful legacy to leave behind." There are many great things that have been said about Colleen in these past days. And it is all true. Colleen's gift was that of inspiration. She possessed an energetic intensity that is rarely seen. Her self-esteem, intelligence, drive and love of humanity affected everyone she met. She made people feel loved, comforted and optimistic. Colleen's grace made her life fulfilling. In such a short period of time, one person has made a world of difference. "She was a great person, she was an amazing teacher." I have heard these words many times in these past few days. All describing a bright light in our lives who just wanted to make this world a better place by focusing on the adults of our future. Colleen's passion in life was to be a teacher. Her love for teaching started as early as her preschool class with Miss Laura. In the words of Miss Laura, "She was the most amazing person you could ever hope to meet ... so very blessed to have been her first teacher and fiend." She had a way of leaving a lasting impression on her students. It is difficult to sum up all of the wonderful things her students have said and written. The common theme is that, "Ms. Ritzer has inspired all of us and was always positive. She lit up the room with her contagious smile and bright, loving personality." Some students even said that they didn't even like math until they had her as a teacher. Colleen made her classroom fun by incorporating inspirational quotes and pictures and saying things like, "Yay math! Yay proofs!" She was not just their teacher; but their mentor. You can see the effect she has had and how the community has bonded together to commemorate and celebrate Colleen's life. ... As enthusiastic as Colleen was about her friends and her job as a teacher, her heart and soul were encompassed in her family. She always loved when we had family get-togethers, no matter the occasion. ... She is the daughter that every parent hopes their children will become once they grow up. The love she was given as a child continued to thrive through her life into adulthood. Colleen's relationship with her mom and dad was indescribable. She was so happy to be with them and took so much pride in being their daughter. I have witnessed many people complimenting Peg and Tom on how they raised Colleen to be such a beautiful, kind person. ... "Find something good in every day." Colleen did find something good in every single day. She even kept a memory jar, containing events and good things that have happened to her. I could go on and on about my beautiful cousin, but there are not enough words. So I would like to leave you with this: A heart so big, God couldn't let it live. May angels lead you in. Your memory will live on forever in the hearts of everyone you touched as a teacher, daughter, sister, granddaughter, niece, cousin and friend. Heaven stole an angel from us today. You will

A very vintage Halloween

Historical Society's costume party casts spells of fun

The Andover Historical Society ended its month of Halloween-themed history tricks and treats with History on Tap – A Vintage Halloween Party on Saturday night at Old Town Hall. Costumed guests enjoyed the predictions of a Victorian fortune teller and a photo booth that captured all the spell-binding activity. Ted Teichert sat in as DJ and there were hors d'oeuvres served along with plenty of surprises. While vintage or Halloween costumes were not required, most everyone got into the spirit of the bewitching evening of classic Halloween fun.

The annual Masquerade Ball returned to the Crystal Ballroom at The Town House, aka Old Town Hall, Sunday night. The event celebrates the Crystal Ballroom that was an institution in Andover until the 1950s. In 2010, "The Crystal Ballroom at the Townhouse" was revived as a collaboration between local organizations for the benefit of the town and to offer another option for evening entertainment in Andover.

Lending support through laughter

A comedy night to benefit the educational fund for the children of an Andover teacher who battled scleroderma and became a source for laughter, knowledge and guidance for the local support group she attended will be held Friday, Nov. 1, at the Claddagh, 339 Canal St., Lawrence.

Karin Sears, a North Andover native who later lived in Methuen, taught at West Elementary School. She was known for making her scleroderma support group laugh through illness. Now in return, her friends from the support group want to support Sears' daughters and they felt there was no better way to do that than with a comedy night in her honor doing what she did best — making everyone laugh. The show will feature comedians Jim Lauletta, Dave Rattigan, Katie Grady and Steve Bjork. Doors open at 7 p.m.; the show starts at 8. There will also be raffles, a cash bar and food available. For tickets, contact Carla King at 978-884-4866 or Carla.King@comcast.net. For more, visit "A Night For Karin" on Facebook.

Musical benefit for Andona Society

Musician and comedian Jim Plunkett, a staple of Boston nightlife for decades, headlines the Andona Society's fall fundraiser on Saturday, Nov. 2, at 7 p.m. at Hillview Country Club in North Reading. Plunkett has been performing in the New England area for decades and is known for getting audiences singing some of their favorite hits.

The event will include a silent auction for such items as signed sports memorabilia, weekend stays, gift cards, gift baskets and more, plus a raffle. This year's event will also include table sponsors and a coupon book for discounts to businesses in the Andovers and North Reading. For more than 50 years, the volunteer, nonprofit Andona Society has been raising thousands of dollars with the support of local businesses and residents to enhance educational, athletic and cultural enrichment programs offered to young people in Andover. Tickets for the concert $25; light fare will be served and a cash bar will be available. The event is sponsored by Lannan Mazda of Lowell. For tickets or more information, visit www.andona.com or email contact@andona.org or Megan Fairfield at megananner@gmail.com.

Several local performers will join ACTING OUT, a local theater group, for its production of "CLUE TOO" and "CLUE: The Musical" this weekend at THE SPACE at Bell Tower Square, 56 Island St., Lawrence. During each performance, the audience will play the popular Parker Brothers game "CLUE" with real actors as the six suspects, in an effort to solve the mystery of who murdered the show's host, Mr. Boddie. Each night, the ending changes, depending on which suspect is selected by the audience to be the murderer. "This is a really fun, interactive show that all ages can

TAKING AIM

Youngsters try their hand at bow & arrow

Robin Hood, beware. Some local youngsters are sharpening their arrows and taking target practice this fall. The four-week program is being offered by the Andover Department of Community Services and led by Lucy Morris and the New England School of Archery staff.

Participants ages 7 to 17 are divided into beginner and intermediate groups and learn the basic techniques of the sport, including proper shooting form and safety rules. They also enjoy archery games as they practice target shooting.

According to the U.S.A. Archery, the sport is becoming one of the most popular in the country. The New England School of Archery, based in Concord, N.H., aims to teach Olympic-style target archery to all ages and abilities as well as individuals with disabilities. Morris, who is the executive director, has taught all over New England, working with both children and adults and conducting instructor trainings.

A new group of possible Olympic hopefuls raised their bows this week as a new session of Andover DCS' archery program began at West Elementary School.

Jackson Fields, 8, is given his bow to use during an archery class led by New England School of Archery at West Elementary School.

Students see how close they came to hitting their marks as they assess their targets.

Josh Berman, 8, prepares to release an arrow during the fall class offered by the Andover Department of Community Services.

Arrows are put into their position on their bows during a recent youth archery session.

Turn it off

Education expert to reduce screen time

She calls this generation "screeners" as they seem to be always looking at a media screen to hear music, play a video game, or talk and text on a cellphone.

And, kids are being introduced to the technology younger and younger, a fact that Nancy Carlsson-Paige finds especially worrisome.

The child development expert comes to Andover next week to talk about the media's influence on today's youths as the next presenter in the Andover Parent to Parent group's annual speaker series.

Carlsson-Paige will speak about "Taking Back Childhood: Raising Kids in Challenging Times" on Wednesday, Nov. 6, at 7:30 p.m. at West Elementary School.

"I'm a grandmother, so I see younger and younger kids with screens," she said. "It worries me. Why can't kids just have free time and just play?"

Some of those grandchildren just happen to be the daughters of Hollywood superstar actor Matt Damon, who is Carlsson-Paige's son.

Carlsson-Paige said even her own family members are concerned about media saturation with youths and are seeking to stem the infiltration of screen time in their children's lives. They, like parents in Andover and elsewhere, want to know how they can slow down the screening madness, especially among the real young, she said.

"There are no easy answers ... this is complicated," said Carlsson-Paige, a professor emerita at Lesley University in Cambridge who has a doctorate in education. She was a founder of the university's Center for Peaceable Schools.

Carlsson-Paige said research is showing screening overload is affecting a child's development.

"It's not good news," she said. "... Too much media and screens is not making for a healthy development for a child."

Carlsson-Paige blamed corporate marketing for targeting young children, motivating children to hound their parents for the latest media equipment. Taking on corporations is no easy job, she said. She and her son are no strangers to that. Together, they have opposed the Teach for America organization, lobbying against what they say is its use of young teachers in place of experienced educators.

On her visit to Andover, Carlsson-Paige will zoom in on a parent's role in the battle against too much screen time.

"It's hard, I know, because parents today are so stressed..." she said.

Admission to the presentation is free. For more information, visit www.andoverp2p.com.

Center of attention

Schnakenberg emerges as star for red-hot volleyball team

BY DAVID WILLIS
dwillis@andovertownsm.com

Rachel Schnakenberg knew she had her work cut out for her one year ago, having just moved from Virginia to Andover, if she was going to make the powerhouse Golden Warrior varsity volleyball team as a junior.

"I was so nervous," said Schnakenberg. "The coaches told me I was either going to make varsity or JV and I thought, 'Juniors can be on JV?' That worried me. It was tough and I knew Andover had such a good team. But I ended up making it so it was all good."

Not only did she make the team, but she has emerged as a star for the recently crowned Merrimack Valley Conference co-champions.

"Rachel has really blossomed this year," Golden Warriors coach George Sullivan said. "She came to us for the first time last year and it was quite an adjustment. But she has improved so much and she is one of our top guns now. She is our go-to hitter."

With Schnakenberg in the middle, the Golden Warrior volleyball team closed out the regular season with a stellar 19-1 record, having gone undefeated after a loss in the season-opener.

"It's been a pretty great year," said Schnakenberg. "We lost that first game, and were upset. But we picked ourselves up and it has been an amazing season since."

It has been quite a journey for Schnakenberg from her early years growing up on the other side of the country.

She was raised as a girl in Utah, before moving to Virginia when she was in the sixth grade.

"My mother got a job at the Pentagon so we moved out there and Virginia was great," said Schnakenberg, whose soon-to-be stepfather is former NASA astronaut Robert Curbeam. "People up here think it's really boring out there. But I was right outside of Washington, D.C., so it was very culturally diverse."

But Schnakenberg and her mother were on the move again last summer, when they moved from Virginia to Andover. After playing varsity volleyball as a sophomore at her old high school (Potomac Falls), she knew she would try out for the Andover High squad.

"I walked in the first day and I didn't know anyone," she said. "I didn't know who to talk to or eat lunch with. It is tough to move around. I moved three times in one year around Utah when I was a kid. But you have to put yourself out there."

"Volleyball ended up being great because the girls really embraced me, so by the time the school year started I had friends. It made everything so much easier."

Schnakenberg both made the varsity squad and earned a starting spot as right-side hitter for the team that finished 23-1 and advanced to the Division 1 state semifinals. She finished third on the team in blocks (69) and added 46 kills.

So she knew a great deal would be expected of her this season as a senior, when she moved into the middle hitter role previously played by 2012 MVC Division 1 Player of the Year Liz Wait.

"I think I was even more nervous because now I had expectations," she said with a laugh. "We lost nine seniors from last year's team, and seven of them were starters so we knew it was going to be a different season. But once we lost the first game we kind of said, 'It's over with, let's start playing.'"

Since that point, the Golden Warriors have been

Tough defeat knocks football from postseason

BY DAVID WILLIS
dwillis@andovertownsm.com

At the same stadium that hosted its last playoff game a season ago against St. John's Prep, Andover football was hoping last Friday night to lock down a second straight trip to the postseason.

Unfortunately for the Golden Warriors, back-to-back postseason berths were not in the cards, as a gritty Lowell squad used an outstanding defensive effort and some timely offense to beat Andover 28-7.

The loss ended the Warriors' tourney chances, and moved them to the consolation bracket of the newly realigned MIAA playoff system. They finished as the No. 9 seed in the Division 1 North bracket, with the top eight making the postseason. Malden finished as the final seed to qualify.

Andover will now play Lawrence this Friday in a home game at Eugene V. Lovely Field.

"The first half was back and fourth and I thought the defense played well," Golden Warriors coach E.J. Perry said. "But we left the D out on the field for too long, which has been

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

COLE ORGANISCIK FOOTBALL

The 6-foot, 205-pound running back, wide receiver and linebacker was a highlight in the loss to Lowell High on Friday night. He led the defense with nine tackles, two for a loss. He has had a stellar year, averaging 9.8 tackles per game. He also has five batted-down balls and eight sacks. Offensively, he has eight runs for 41 yards and 3 receptions for 24 yards. Last year, Cole caught the winning TD in the Thanksgiving Day win over Central Catholic. Cole will apply to Colby College among other fine institutions. Coach E.J. Perry's comments: "Cole has been a mainstay on the Andover High varsity football team. He is an excellent student/athlete, recently scoring a 1940 on the SATs. He's a leader."

EMILY GIBSON FIELD HOCKEY

Emily, a back, was key to the Andover High defense this past week. She controlled much of the play at the 50-yard line against Beverly, North Andover and Danvers. This week, Andover allowed only one goal in the three matches and in 18 games played, and six overall. Coach Maureen Noone's comments: "Playing the difficult post position on defensive corners, Emily often does not get the recognition she deserves. She understands her important role as a center back."
