When trouble strikes, Patrick evades and deflects

An independent review of the Massachusetts Department of Children and Families is needed and welcome.

But it is troubling that, in the lead-up to the announcement of the investigation, Gov. Deval Patrick spent more time defending the malfunctioning agency than demanding answers for the disappearance of a 5-year-old boy.

"I think it's important not to jump to conclusions," Patrick, speaking of the social workers in the agency, told reporters. 'They have an enormously difficult job. They perform miracles every day, hundreds and hundreds of miracles that don't get the attention of all of you here, but do earn, I believe, the respect of the public, certainly of mine.'

The DCF last had contact with the boy in

May 2013. An internal investigation found that the social worker

assigned to the case

failed to make routine

monthly visits or follow up on several reports of abuse and that a supervisor covered up those failings.

But something went terribly wrong at the DCF in the case of young Jeremiah Oliver of Fitchburg, whose family had been under agency supervision. The 5-year-old is missing and presumed dead. Extended family members say they have not seen the boy since September yet police have only recently been informed that he is missing. The boy's mother, Elsa Oliver, and her boyfriend, Alberto Sierra Jr., have been arrested and have pleaded not guilty to child endangerment, abuse and other charges.

The DCF last had contact with the boy in May 2013.

An internal investigation found that the social worker assigned to the case failed to make routine monthly visits or follow up on several reports of abuse and that a supervisor covered up those failings.

The social worker, the supervisor and an area manager were fired. A fourth employee was suspended.

The governor and the agency have been pushing the notion that this was an isolated failing, rather than a systemic prob-

But state Sen. Michael Barrett, D-Lexington, was having none of it. Barrett is co-chairman of the Children, Families and Persons with Disabilities Committee.

"The situation cries out for truth-telling, self-examination and possibly self-criticism. It's becoming harder to suppose we're dealing with just a few bad apples rather than a systemic problem," Barrett said in a statement reported by the State House News Service. "During hard times, have all the key decision-makers protected DCF's capacity to do its job?"

Patrick has been under mounting pressure for an independent investigation of the DCF and he has announced that a review will be conducted by the Child Welfare League of America, an organization that advocates for children

But Patrick's instincts were also on display as he repeatedly defended the agency, even as the boy remains missing.

"You know, this is not a job for amateurs, right. There are procedures that are in common with, that do or don't reflect best practices around the country. There are judgment calls that social workers have to make every day, and most of them widely successful and not reported on, that happen daily," Patrick told a group of reporters, as the news service reported. "But when something goes wrong, particularly in the life of a child it is deeply concerning to me and to the general public. And so what we've been talking about is whether there isn't some group or agency that is knowledgeable and has some real gravitas and experience in this area that might help us bring a fresh set of eyes. That is what we are trying to sort out."

Patrick's statements and the time he took to call for an independent investigation are telling. They reveal a governor whose instincts are, when trouble strikes, to rally around the bureaucracy and fend off tough questions, rather than demand the answers that will hold public servants accountable and possibly avert future tragedies.

WEB QUESTION

THIS WEEK'S QUESTION

With the School Committee's redistricting process wrapping up, the future of Shawsheen is still a contentious point. What do you think should happen?

STAY ON COURSE, CLOSE IT NEXT YEAR: The plan from the beginning has been to close Shawsheen — kindergarten through grade two — once the elementary schools are redistricted. That's what voters signed up for.

KEEP IT OPEN FOR THE TIME BEING: Preschool students will still be at the school. Why take kindergarten through grade two out if the building will still be in use? Keep it open until a preschool solution is found.

KEEP IT OPEN IN PERPETUITY: It's a cherished school building that is loved by its students and parents. Closing it at all, even taking preschool students out of it, shouldn't be considered.

LAST WEEK'S QUESTION

Last week, we asked, "The state Supreme Judicial Court has ruled juvenile offenders serving life prison sentences should be offered parole. Do you agree with its decision?" With 84 votes, the answers were:

NO: Juveniles are charged as adults because of the nature of their crimes, and future rehabilitation is considered by prosecutors — 72 votes, 85.71 percent.

YES: Life sentences don't consider a defendant's likelihood of being rehabilitated by serving in prison — 12 votes, 14.29 percent.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Keep mailboxes, walkways clear for letter carriers

Editor, Townsman:

Yes, the snow is finally here ... and the daily routine of letter carriers puts them on the front lines whenever harsh weather strikes.

Letter carriers can be the first to visit a home before snow removal or salting begins. And they may use stairways, porches or walkways that a family does not frequent during the winter months. That's why the Postal Service reminds residents not to overlook regular upkeep of residential mailboxes as part of any snow and ice removal routine.

Here are a few tips for use with your mailbox that never go out of season:

- Remove obstructions a mailbox at the road, keep it clear of packed snow. Clearing the mailbox allows letter carriers to deliver mail safely and without delay.
- Painted porches and steps are particularly hazard-zoology and astronomy. ous. Salting an area or using rubber-backed mats may help make them less slippery.
- A mailbox should display the street name and house number on the side or on the doors of grouped mailboxes so they are visible to the approaching carrier. Add a reflector and house numbers for visibility by your letter carrier, plows, emergency vehicles and others.
- Watch for letter carriers on foot and slow-moving postal vehicles.
- Leave a light on to help illuminate potential hazards on the way to your mailbox.

Help us so we can provide you with excellent service. Make regular upkeep of residential mailboxes a part of your snow and ice removal routine.

STEAM Studio not right for Andover

Editor, Townsman:

This letter is in response to the STEAM Studio Charter School proposed for Andover. Like many people, I support the charter school movement, and have done so since I worked in the Sacramento School District in the early 1990s, when the superintendent asked me to create a charter school for the district a school that continues to thrive to this day. Today, I work with a group in New Orleans developing a proposal for a charter school for early childhood students. I like the idea of competition and innovation, and know that the best charter schools have helped public education improve.

So, though I support charter schools overall, I do not support the STEAM Studio Charter School for two reasons: First, I do not find the proposal particularly innovative or unique. In fact, course offerings would appear to duplicate much of what Andover High School and the Greater Lawrence Technical School now offer. For example, AHS already has science courses such around a mailbox. If you have as biotechnology, bioethics and engineering. Further, AHS offers many science courses not proposed by STEAM Studio, including oceanography/marine biology, animal behavior/ AHS has been committed to ensuring students acquire 21st century skills for many years, skills such as building understanding across and among core subjects, emphasizing deep understanding rather than shallow knowledge, and engaging students with the real world data, tools and experts they will encounter in college, on the job and in life. STEAM Studio lacks much of what a comprehensive high school provides its students, both in academics and in after-school clubs and athletics. I have to wonder: Did the STEAM Studio folks look at AHS' core mission and course catalogue?

Second, the financial toll on the Andover Public Schools budget would be significant. The state Postmaster Department of Elementary U.S. Postal Service and Secondary Education website states: "Charter schools are funded by tuition charges assessed against the school districts where the students reside." Tuition could be as high as $10,000 per student. This could render a serious financial blow to APS, because even if the student population at the high school were reduced, the school does not decrease that much. There might be some reduction in class size, but likely not enough to reduce the teaching staff, because even if a class goes from 30 to 25 students, you still need a teacher for that class. The school still needs administrators, secretaries, custodians, guidance counselors, nurses and cafeteria workers. So, the result could be a lot less money to operate the same plant.

Dr. Claudia Bach is a former superintendent of the Andover Public Schools.

Student Government faces disinterest, not exclusivity

Editor, Townsman:

In recent months, the Andover High School Student Government has faced a series of attacks regarding its legitimacy. Inherent in these attacks were fallacies that must be clarified in order to continue healthy Editor, Townsman: discourse.

The first fallacy is that Student Government does not represent the views of Andover High School students. The reasoning for this statement is that there are relatively few students in Student Government and that not everyone can join Student Government.

To address the issue of our lack of students, our members represent 100 percent of the members who applied. Our application process is meant to separate students who are likely to be committed members from those who aren't likely. Thus far, all of the applicants have been identified as the former. This means that the lack of students is due to a disinterest from the student body and not from exclusivity.

It has also been claimed that Student Government is not an open forum. This is simply false. We hold weekly meetings on Thursday afternoons at 2:15 p.m. that are completely open to the public. Anyone can attend and contribute. Unfortunately, lack of student interest and participation has meant that we've had few outside attendees.

The final misconception that we would like to address is that Student Government would be more effective if the officials were elected. However, there have been legitimate concerns that such a process would disintegrate into a popularity contest. By maintaining our application process (which is overseen by an adult advisor), we ensure that any committed prospective member is able to join.

It is important to note that we are not contending that Student Govern-CLAUDIA L. BACH, ED.D. ment is a perfect entity. We encourage all of our critics to participate in productive criticism by voicing their concerns at our meetings. Continually writing misinformed attacks online only encourages divisiveness.

Andover Robotics Club grateful for support

I would like to take the opportunity to thank the community for the tremendous support and assistance provided this past weekend. The Andover Robotics Club at Andover High School hosted a regional FTC robotic tournament. Sixteen teams attended from throughout New England. and the town of Andover came out to see robots in motion. Well over 250 people were in attendance, and the support provided by our parents, students, alumni and community volunteers was extraordinary.

I would like to thank our volunteers and everyone who attended. Special kudos to community mentors and returning alumni who helped judge or referee, as well as students and parents who worked nonstop to make this a smooth, enjoyable and rewarding day. Andover should be proud of how much support was provided for our students.

The Andover Robotics Team has two teams that will be competing next Saturday at Arlington High School. Feel free to come on by and cheer us on.

Weekly yoga series stretches the bounds of Sunday mornings

By Judy Wakefield jwakefield@andovertownsman.com

It's Sunday morning in Andover. You are on your morning downtown coffee run and can't help but notice several yoga types with mats hurriedly heading to 45 Main St.

But most Main Street stores don't open yet. So what's going on?

ning Company is opening an hour early on Sunday mornings for a free yoga class.

From 11 a.m. to noon this winter, the retail store is turning its downstairs community room into a yoga studio.

"New Balance came in and helped us paint the room, and it looks great," said Tom Poland of Greater Boston Running. "It's really worked out well."

Poland said eight to 10 yoga enthusiasts faithfully show up every Sunday morning for the class, which is taught by a rotating lineup of about 15 instructors from studios across the North Shore, including Brickstone Fitness and Home Yoga, both

The Greater Boston Run- of Andover. Classes started Dec. 1 and currently are running through March 30.

> Yoga instructor Susan Currie of Andover, who teaches at Brickstone, recruited the lineup of class leaders and attends every session herself.

"The classes are geared toward anyone — athlete or not, providing folks are in decent physical shape. And, it's totally free with no catch," she said.

Poland said the yoga apparel company Prana is underwriting the series. The store carries Prana apparel, and Poland said if he makes a sale, great. But purchases are not required.

"It's been so rewarding to watch so many new faces dropping in to the store to give yoga a try. Currie, an instructor for nearly 10 years, knows firsthand the difference that a regular yoga practice can make.

"Over the years, I have seen many folks transformed by its merits," Currie said. "I think I speak for all of us volunteering our time and talent to this program when I say thank you to Greater Boston Running Company and Prana for making this happen. Nicole Brezinski, another voga instructor who is a fifth-grade teacher at High Plain Elementary School in Andover, is also thrilled to get the good word out about a free yoga class.

"To witness folks digging deeper, maybe stepping out of their zones of comfort and then transformed in some small way simply makes my day," Brezinski, who teaches at The Yoga Loft in Wilmington, said in an email.

It's not too late to join in the classes. Just go about 15 minutes early to secure your spot, Poland said, as word is getting out about the free series.

It's personal for Worthley, too, as she has a niece currently in remission from cancer who is pictured in the show's program.

"It's a picture of her kicking as she has kicked cancer," said Worthley, who lives in Andover.

Worthley's husband, Scott, is the manager at the Collins Center and has volunteered to work the event. That means production costs are minimal so there's more money to donate, which Flynn said is fantastic.

Flynn said she sought out the Collins Center after the inaugural event last year sold out the 450seat Haverhill High School Auditorium, raising $4,500 for the American Cancer Society in the process. But because she had to turn away dance companies that wanted to participate due to space and time restrictions, she knew she needed to find a larger venue this year. The Collins Center with its 1,200 seats was a perfect choice, she said.

Flynn said she is hoping for a full house and a much larger donation for the American Cancer

"My goal is to host 15 of these events so I can raise a lot of money for cancer research," Flynn said.

She's dancing her way to that magic number.

Townspeople got into the act — literally — for the return of "Downton Abbey," dressing as their favorite characters from the popular series during a tea party last week at Memorial Hall Library.

The party celebrated the start of season 4 of the British period drama series on PBS. 'Downton' fans took a quiz matching characters with quotes from earlier seasons. There were also plenty of refreshments — and tea, of course — to be had at last Friday's event.

Gayle Heney dressed the part for last week's "Downton Abbey" celebration at Memorial Hall Library.

Mary Byers Smith, the first woman elected to the Andover School Committee, devoted her life to numerous social service organizations and endeavors.

Mary Byers Smith: A pioneering storyteller at heart

Andover Stories

Cindy Bernstein Andover Historical Society

Mary Byers Smith (1885-1983) has been described as "a fascinating storyteller and historian" and "an early leader in the women's movement."

According to the authors of "Red Cloak for Mother, History of Smith Family in Andover," her impact on her home and her community is "remembered and revered."

The second youngest of nine children born to Joseph Smith and Fannie Smart Donald Smith, Smith was the granddaughter of John Smith, co-founder of Smith and Dove Flax Manufacturers in Andover. Her many accomplishments complemented her long life of 97 years.

In the 1920s, she became the first woman elected to the Andover School Committee. She was also trustee Sketches," a biography of of Memorial Hall Library and of the Free Church, where she was a lifetime member.

After graduating from Abbot Academy in Andover, of his letters from which Smith was one of four out of 23 who went on to attend college. In a 1972 interview recorded by Jacqueline Van ter was written as though Voris for the College Centennial Study, Smith said she chose Smith College in Northampton because her

Her family, she said, was not supportive. "My brothers thought the less you had, the better," she said. Her uncle who was the rector of Trinity Church, "did not approve of college for women at all."

But in spite of her family's opinions, Smith immersed herself in the college culture. Although she had to miss a year because of illness, Smith was elected president of her class of 1908. She developed a longtime interest in her alma mater, serving as trustee and director of the alumni association.

In 1916, Smith co-founded Hampshire Bookshop in Northampton along with fellow Smith graduate Marion Dodd. The bookshop, staffed as well as owned by women, hosted lectures and discussions with authors, including Robert Frost.

Giving up the chance to pursue a career in bookbinding, Smith, who never married, moved back to Andover to help take care of her parents. She began a "professional" volunteer career in social services. which she continued well into her 80s.

In the 1920s, she became the first woman elected to the Andover School Committee. She was also trustee of Memorial Hall Library and of the Free Church, where she was a lifetime member.

She first worked for the state Board of Charity, then Public Welfare followed by the Social Services Department at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston and later for the state Board of Education, putting libraries in hospitals and penal institutions.

As an English major, Smith wrote poetry, some of which was privately published in the 1920s. In the 1930s, she took a course in writing at Radcliffe College in Cambridge.

For the course, she wrote and later revised "Family the Smith Family. Although her grandfather passed away a year after she was born, she lived in the same house and was in possession she could glean insightful details from which to write about the family. Each chapshe was a witness to conver-library in 1873. In 1946, on the 100th anniversary of the Free Christian Church, Smith wrote and read an historical paper on the founding of the church. That paper was later described as "a wonderful combination of keen scholarship, affectionate anecdotes and thoughtful reflection."

In the last 30 years of her life, Smith moved to Boston, and became a trustee for the New England Hospital for Women and Children and director of the Orchard Home for Girls.

At her internment, Rev. Roger Hazelton, professor emeritus of Andover Newton Theological School, spoke highly of Smith.

"I suspect that she was never actually lonesome, for she was singularly able to make others' good her own, whether in pioneering public service in Andover or Boston, or as volunteer and trustee in school and college work," Hazelton said.

TRIPLE THREAT

Aaron Wu flies through the water for Andover High. Wu is one of three captains, along with Vincent Camin and Santi Alegria, pacing the undefeated Golden Warriors boys swim team this season.

Tri-captains leading swim team to undefeated start

By David Willis dwillis@andovertownsman.com

For Vincent Camin, it was the dream of following in his brother's footsteps.

For Santi Alegria, it was the moment he realized as a child that he was faster than his friends in the pool.

For Aaron Wu, it was his parents finding a chance for him to exercise more and burn off some energy.

The trio may have found their way to competitive swimming for different reasons, but the result has been the same.

All three have emerged as not just top swimmers for Andover High, but also leaders and tricaptains for the Golden Warriors, who are currently 4-0 in their quest for a third straight unbeaten regular season and Merrimack Valley Conference

"The biggest goal we have is to go undefeated and win the MVC title," Alegria said. "That is what we are focused on, above any individual goal. We feel like we have a really good team and have the chance to do

The little brother

Camin, for one, had always dreamed of swimming for Andover High, following his brother, Stan, who was a standout for the Golden Warriors before a back injury derailed his career. "I learned everything from Stan," Vincent Camin said. "He first got me into swimming about seven years ago. At first, it was just having fun, but watching him when he got to high school, I saw the times that the high school kids were getting. I saw how competitive it was and knew I wanted to be successful and get those times."

When he did arrive at Andover High, he quickly found success as a freshman, swimming on the varsity relays and making state cuts. But it was initially intimidating, he said.

"I was pretty apprehensive at first," Camin said. "Freshman year, joining the team, everything was so new and the kids and after a while, I started to get confident."

66 The biggest goal we have is to go undefeated and win the MVC title.

That is what we are focused on, above any individual goal. We feel like we have a really good team and have the chance to do it. >>

Santi Alegria

Now a senior, Camin has set lofty goals for the rest of this season.

"Right now, my top individual goal is to win the state championship in the 100 breaststroke," said Camin, also a standout in the relays. "Last year, I came in fourth. I saw Eric Zhao win the 100 freestyle and he couldn't have been happier. I don't know what it will feel like, and I know it will be very difficult. But it would be amazing.'

The quick study

Growing up, Wu gave just about every sport a shot in his search for the perfect match.

"When I was younger, I tried baseball and basketball and golf and a few others," Wu said. "But my parents encouraged me to try swimming in the sixth grade, and once I did, I stopped every other sport. I found a sport that I truly liked. It went from swim lessons to club team to competitive swimming.'

Wu made his debut for Andover High as a freshman in the Golden Warriors' meet against Haverhill, and the breakthrough followed.

"When the coaches put me into my first varsity meet, it gave me confidence that I could compete," he said. "They put me into the 500 freestyle and I made the state (championship) cut. Then I knew I was part of the team and I could compete at the highest level after that."

Now in his fourth year as a stalwart on the varsity team, Wu knows what events are the best fit for his ability.

"Freestyle and butterfly are the strokes I can swim the best," were really good. But it was fun, said Wu, also a key relay swimmer. "Freestyle is my strongest. I have very flexible shoulders and I can rotate my arms as fast as possible. That's what makes them the perfect fit for me.

"I love to swim. When I'm not at school or at home doing homework, I am probably at the pool working out."

The reluctant standout

Alegria's love of swimming was born during recreational time at the pool as a kid. But it took some pushing from his parents to compete.

'My parents used to tell me I was faster than all of my friends when we were swimming," he said. "They thought I should try out for the swim team. I didn't really want to at first, but I did for them. I didn't even think I would make the club team as a kid, but then I got the call that I had made it and I was excited."

That initial hesitance quickly turned into a passion as Alegria advanced to high school. As a freshman, he began to swim for the Andover varsity team, but he admitted his greatest individual achievement occurred just a few weeks ago.

"I just recently made state times in the 50 freestyle and 100 breaststroke," said Alegria, who is also a member of multiple relays. "That was my first time making the state cut, so that was pretty important for me. It was really exciting and a real breakthrough.'

When he was elected a captain along with his two friends, Alegria said he was unsure if it would be a perfect fit.

"I am not the most vocal person," he said. "In the best, I was just a member of the team and was quiet. But this year I had to step up and lead and lead the dry land workouts. It has been very different, but it has also been really fun and my other captains have done a great job."

With all three captains looking to attend colleges with Division 1 swim teams, the trio of swimmers believe this could be their final season of true competition. So they want to finish in style.

"I think we have a very good chance at winning MVCs," Wu said. "It won't be easy, that's for sure. But this team has had a lot of kids really step up, and I think we could have a great
