It takes time to eat a whole apple. For students eating an entire meal during their lunch periods, consuming an apple in its entirety isn't always as easy as it sounds.

"One big problem we find is that in a lot of cases, kids just don't have time to eat a whole apple," said Andover Public Gail Koutroubas. "Untouched

Kids get cheated on math

By Gabriella Cruz gcruz@andovertownsman.com

Math took center stage last Tuesday night as nearly 200 parents attended a forum at the West Middle School auditorium to discuss the future of the district's most talked about subject.

Billed as a community forum, the roughly two-hour event was more of a presentation of options arrived at by school officials. One thing they promised, however, was that Algebra I would return to the middle

"We are going to have Algebra I at the eighth-grade level and we are presenting that to the school committee," Assistant Superintendent Nancy Duclos said to the crowd. "What we are looking for from you is to give us your feedback on the different options."

The forum was hosted by middle school principals, the district's math program head Katherine Richard, Duclos and Superintendent Sheldon Berman.

Format difficult

During the 60-minute opening presentation, school officials outlined the various options available to parents. Ultimately,

Administrators make case for more money

By Gabriella Cruz gcruz@andovertownsman.com

An influx of non-English speaking students into Andover schools is putting a significant financial squeeze on the district, according to Superintendent Sheldon

The result is the need for additional resources to help out with the extra teaching load.

According to Berman, the district will see a 20.5 percent increase in English as a Second Language students during fiscal year 2017. Because of this increase, Assistant Superintendent Nancy Duclos said schools will need $25,000, up from last year's $10,000, to acquire translation and interpretation services for these students.

THE MIDDLE SCHOOL OPTIONS

OPTION 1

The first option presented to parents was referred to as "Math On Team," and would pull students into one combined Algebra I class so that qualified students remain together in the accelerated course. While this option would allow students to reach AP Calculus as seniors without "doubling up" on math courses as sophomores, identifying students for accelerated classes would need to occur earlier, in sixth- and seventh-grades, and would diminish the middle school philosophy of "heterogeneous grouping," West Middle School Principal Becky Franks said.

"Another key component of middle-(school)learning is heterogeneous grouping," Franks said. "Middle school is sort of the last time in our students life where they aren't leveled and sorted. So we want to preserve that, while at the same time, offer our students who are ready for challenging math to have what they need."

"Math Off Team," the second proposed option, would require three new full-time teachers, one at each middle school. With this option, each school would offer one accelerated course to all students that meet the criteria. Students would be able to move levels throughout the school year. It would require additional classroom space in addition to three new instructors.

AT_AT_20160121_1_01,02,03

Under the third proposal, "Math During Flex Time," each middle school would shift students from "flex time" classes like chorus, band or orchestra, into the accelerated math curriculum. This would require qualified students to give up the opportunity to participate in band, orchestra or chorus. Although they would be learning math at a higher level, they would also learn at the standard level with the rest of their classmates.

"Algebra for All" would teach Algebra I to every middle school student. While this offers equity throughout the district's math curriculum, it also disregards the diverse learning speeds of students. According to Richard, students required to learn concepts they are not academically ready for has the potential to both decrease test scores and impose long-term problems for students.

not the model, and I feel I did very well through it and so did the other students," he said.

Stump agreed.

"Any family that wants to try to get to a higher level should be allowed to try it, and if the students slide back, move them back to a lower math level," she said. Furthermore, decisions about where children are placed should be arrived at in conjunction with parents and their children.

"Decisions shouldn't be made behind closed doors," she said. "The administrators needs to work with parents and children.'

What's next

Duclos told parents she and Richard would be working with middle school and high school principals to create the acceleration criteria, which she said would be ready option, and the third option, Berman also assured parents because I don't believe the that more avenues, including other two are viable based acceleration at the high school George Yundt, a parent to on the presentations given level, were being explored and students, said he believed that people believe in segregating oped before next school year.

High schoolers plan for town's future

By Gabriella Cruz gcruz@andovertownsman.com

Through a high school internship course, local students are making big changes that they hope will make the town of Andover a better place for years to come.

In Andover High School's Environmental Sustainability Course, seniors work with a mentor from a local organization or business to develop projects that can increase the town's environmental sustainability. During the course, the students work in and out of the classroom on their projects that have potential to reach much farther than the one-year course.

Last Friday, students shared posters they had made of their projects with members of the public and the school.

Students measured salt levels along the Shawsheen River, met with local offipocket parks throughout around town, and surveyed how residents relate to the more.

Students present their projects to members of the public who attended a forum at the high school on Friday.

Yazhini Ramesh, a senior, has met with members from Memorial Hall Library, Andover Historical Society, Andover Green Advisory Board, Rotary Club of Andover, and Economic Development Council to discuss the possibilities of building pocket parks that combine the town's history with it's future by "contributing greatly toward a renewed sense of place for a community.'

History can also play into sustainability in other ways, and Hannah Passanisi has been working with the Andover Historical Society to uncover how. Through surveys and hours of research, Passanisi worked to discover ways that Andover's past can be communicated through technology to keep future generations engaged in the history. Sustaining an interest in history, Passanisi said, can instill a sense of pride in residents and lead them to cials to create plans for town, studied biking routes the community to uncover care for their environment

Bancroft Elementary is looking for a new leader.

Norah McCarthy, the school's interim principal, will complete her one-vear position at the end of this school year, leaving a vacancy at the top spot.

Director of Human Resources Candace Hall sent a letter on Thursday, Jan. 14 to district parents asking for their help in selecting Bancroft's new principal. In the letter, Hall said that an advertisement for the position had been printed in the Boston Sunday Globe on Jan. 10, and had also been posted to online recruitment sites in

INTERESTED?

December.

The deadline for applications is Friday, Feb. 5, and the preliminary screening committee will be identifying candidates for the superintendent's consideration shortly after. Hall also encouraged parents to let her know of any candidates they think should be considered for the position.

On Monday, Jan. 25 at 6 p.m., the district will hold a focus group at Bancroft, open to the community, to develop a profile of the ideal candidate. For those unable to attend, Hall asked parents to share their thoughts via email.

The preliminary screening committee will be made up of a chairperson, three administrators, three teachers and three parents. The committee will be responsible for reading each candidate's application and assessing each according to the hiring criteria.

Members of the committee must be able to attend all of the search team meetings and interviews. Meetings have been scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 2 at 4 p.m., Friday, Feb. 12 at 4 p.m., and interviews will be conducted during the week of Feb. 22-26. Finalists will be identified no later than Friday, Feb. 26.

Merrimack Valley leaders tout downtown development

By Zoe Mathews z mathews@eagletribune.com

Local leaders spoke of Brooks Brothers suits and kayaking down the Shawsheen River at the annual Merrimack Valley Mayors and Managers Breakfast yesterday.

"This is the year of downtown," said Andover Town Manager Andrew Flanagan, highlighting new projects to make the Shawsheen River more accessible to the downtown area.

Downtown development proved to be a major theme of the breakfast, moderated by Cal Williams, chairman of Government Affairs at the Merrimack Valley Chamber of Commerce. The event spotlighted town managers, city managers, mayors and other public officials, as they broke bread together to discuss the year in review, and look ahead to the future.

ach Laramie had pondered the move for months.

After spending his freshman season as starting goalie for powerhouse St. John's Prep hockey, Laramie found himself more often on the bench last winter as he helped the Eagles earned their first Super 8 title in program history.

As memorable as taking home the crown was, the netminder found himself itching for a change.

So Laramie decided to go home.

The junior transferred from the Prep to Andover High, and has dominated in net in his first winter wearing Blue and Gold.

In his first six games as Warriors goalie, Laramie allowed just six goals including three straight shutouts.

"It's been great being back at Andover," he said. "It was a very hard decision because technical goalie that is I loved the guys at the Prep. But I wanted to put myself in tion," said Warriors coach the best situation to succeed. I spent months thinking, and I felt like Andover was the best place for me."

A star in the Andover Youth Hockey system, Laramie drew the interest of St. John's Prep while playing club hockey, where his coach was Prep assistant Scott Hentosh.

"I had followed St. John's for a while and saw them play in the Super 8 and have players drafted into the NHL and play for bigtime college programs," Laramie said. "I debated between Andover High and the Prep for a while. "I chose the Prep because they said they wanted me to start on the varsity team as a freshman. They wanted me to play every game that year and that was so appealing so I decided to take my shot.'

Laramie did win the starting job as a freshman, delivering an up-and-down campaign that saw him finish 7-6-2 with a 2.63 goalsagainst average and two shutouts.

"It was very hard stepping I spent the next couple of in and playing varsity as a young kid," he said. "There were a lot of highs and lows, a lot of challenges.

'The toughest day was in the Derek Hines Memorial game, for the former Prep hockey player that died in combat in Afghanistan. I was pulled in the second period and we lost the game. That hurt because I knew how much the game meant to everyone."

He returned to the Prep as a sophomore, but saw his playing time fall off as thenjunior Kyle Martin took a more prominent role, starting 17 games. Laramie did perform well when he was on the ice, going 6-1-0 with a 1.71 goals-against average and two shutouts.

By the time the Super 8 arrived, Laramie never had a chance to see the ice. In a practice leading up to the tournament, the goalie suffered a concussion after a collision with a teammate.

"Winning the Super 8 was something I will never forget," he said. "It was amazing. I loved playing with those guys. But it was also tough being on the bench after starting the year before. But I learned a lot watching. months deciding if I should stay at the Prep or transfer.

"When I got to Andover I was a little nervous, but once the games started it was like I never left. I love being back with guys I grew up playing with like (Matt) Sharrio and (Michael) Reilly."

After dropping his first start 5-0 to Boston College High School — currently the No. 3 team in the Super 8 rankings — Laramie has been lights out.

"I think I am much more calm now," he said. "When I was at the Prep I think I took the game a little too seriously. I am still dedicated, but I don't dwell on the negative. I've learned to stay even through the highs and lows. I think this team has found its groove and we could make a run from here."

Opinion

Schools must listen to parents on math problem

It may be tempting to dismiss the district's math woes as the result of complaining by a handful of helicopter parents concerned about their over-achieving children.

But it's really about much, much more than that.

Sure, some of the parents may be overzealous and have higher-than-realistic expectations about their children. But certainly there are students in Andover public schools, both at the middle- and high-school levels, who are qualified to take higher-level math classes. Unfortunately, in many cases, they can't. At the middle school, the policy in place at the moment, something they call 'heterogeneous grouping,' puts everyone at the same level of math, whether they are a budding math genius or an average, count-on-the-fingers kind of

At the high school, the only way to get into advanced levels of calculus by senior year is to take summer school, or enroll in some other, private program that enables them to pass a test that bumps them up to the higher level. Or to have come from another school district where Algebra I was offered in middle school.

Parents are rightfully outraged that the school doesn't enable their children to gain access to more rigorous math both in the middle and high school levels.

Lisa Stump, quoted in this week's story about a recent forum on the math curriculum, said she didn't realize until it was too late that her children's middle school math experience would basically be worthless as far as getting into more advanced math classes in high school. The importance of math is something she knows a lot about — she was a math major in college and now works as a software developer. Math is very high on her list of educational priorities, as it should be.

With more than 50 percent of the average Andover resident's very high property taxes going to the schools, it is not too much to ask that local students be provided a complete math education. In the year 2016, when almost everything we do revolves around math, science and engineering, it is not too much to ask that the schools provide the most complete, advanced math curriculum

Last week's forum at the West Middle School was at least a start. Middle school principals and the superintendents explained to about 200 parents how the middle school would soon be teaching Algebra I. It's uncertain how they are going to go about the process, but four options were brought forward. While there was little time for give and take during the forum, parents were invited to a sort of 'information fair' after the forum. But the fair was crowded and the only way to give feedback was to write ideas on sticky notes that were then affixed to poster boards, or be one of the lucky few who got to speak to a teacher or administrator.

The next step in the process is for the middle school principals to meet with teachers to come up with a final solution, which will be proposed to the School Committee next month. Hopefully that the solution incorporates comments and feedback from parents. In the end, everyone is concerned about what's best for the students. And what's best for the students is to give them options that include more rigorous math courses at both the middle and high school levels.

too many opportunities for delays and cancellations that hinder the tracks' original purpose. 2 votes, or 14.3%

This week's question:

In recent months, parents have been concerned about the district's math curriculum, especially the lack of advanced math courses at the middle school level. In response, the district has promised to offer Algebra I to middle schoolers and on numerous occasions, has called for public input on the matter. How do you think the problem's being solved?

The school district is doing the best it can to solve a complex problem.

Students are getting robbed of a good math education which could hurt them in the future. This shouldn't have been a problem in the first place, and

The district's teachers and administrators were hired because they know how to do their respective jobs. As educators, they have experience with students every day and are well-equipped to make the best choices for Andover students

If the district really wanted to know what parents think, their communication lines would be more open rather than one-sided. Yes, they are trained to teach our students, but parents know their children best and their opinions should hold more weight.

In 1918 the world experienced the first influenza pandemic that may have caused more casualties than the Black Death. Andover was not immune

It was estimated that during that year 500 million people worldwide were infected about one-third of the planet's population at the time. Though difficult to calculate exactly, 50 to 100 million of those died from the flu itself or from resulting complications such as pneumonia.

Deaths from influenza in previous years had historically targeted young, old or otherwise immune-weakened patients. This time, though, healthy young adults were the victims, and the virus found a fertile playground within the active duty troops gathered for the battles of World War I. Victims often died within hours or days of their symptoms appearing.

and to maintain wartime morale, reports in the United States and parts of Europe were deliberately downplayed. However, the newspapers were free to report the effect in neutral Spain, creating the false impression that Spain had been hardest hit, and giving the epidemic its nickname — Spanish Flu.

In the United States, the disease was first reported in Kansas in January of 1918. A more virulent strain hit Boston in August. By September, Andover was bracing for the

As compared with surrounding cities such as Salem, Gloucester and Boston, Andover had been fairly free of cases of this wide-spread "grippe." But the danger was real, and to control this looming threat, the Andover Board of Health, on Sept. 26, moved to close public schools as well as the Colonial Theatre and Memorial Hall Library for an indefinite period. Andover was the first — surgical masks. The use town in the immediate area to take this drastic step. Phillips Academy, though reporting no cases of influenza, took suggested precautions as well.

AT_AT_20160121_1_11

By early October, the Board of Health, chaired by Charles E. Abbott, ordered that all public services in local churches be canceled. This order soon extended to all public gatherings and to meetings of various lodges. Influenza was added to the list of diseases that doctors were required to report, and this they were expected to do on a daily basis.

John N. Cole, chairman of Andover's Public Safety Committee, in explaining these low numbers, suggested that the town had an advantage "in the way of high, dry air and good clean streets, homes and working places." Citizens were urged to "take especial care" of themselves. Those needing to care for the sick were expected to be supplied with — and to wear of paper plates and cups was also urged so they could be burned as soon as they were

On Oct. 11, though reports suggested that influenza was under control — with cases standing at 634 — public gatherings were still prohibited. Trained nurses, through the Public Safety Committee, offered voluntary assistance where needed. This assistance included going from house to house on a daily basis where illness was most severe. Mrs. Bartlett Hayes, committee member and PA faculty wife, was said to keep eight to 10 quarts of broth ready at all times for those in need.

The rest of October saw a daily average of 20 cases, and more than the average number of persons ill with pneumonia. Of particular concern was the situation that folks convalescing from influenza, seeming on the road to recovery, suddenly would relapse, with their illness developing into severe pneumonia. Serum was supplied to local doctors, who were ready to furnish free inoculations, though a full-scale inoculating station was never needed

Andover/North Andover YMCA begins new chapter by doubling its size

By Paul Tennant ptennant@eagletribune.com

ANDOVER — You can't miss it.

Take a drive on Haverhill Street, also known as Route 133, and just past the North Andover town line you will find a large glass and concrete edifice and through the massive windows you'll see hundreds of people running on treadmills, pumping iron and performing all sorts of other activities to improve their health and physical fitness.

This "glass box," the newly expanded Andover/ North Andover YMCA, offers three floors of workout opportunities. It's just about double the size of the original facility that was constructed in 1973.

The footprint of the original building, which resulted from a grass-roots effort in the Andovers, measured 55,000 square feet, according to James Kapelson, vice president of membership and marketing for the Merrimack Valley YMCA. The Merrimack Valley YMCA includes both the Andover/North Andover and Lawrence Y's.

The expanded Andover/ North Andover boasts 109,000 square feet, Kapelson said. Within its walls, one can do just about any workout.

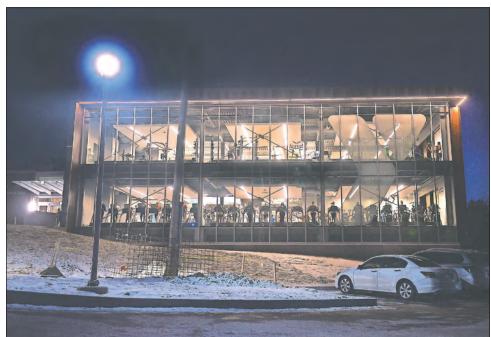

You want to toss around a truck tire? No problem, they've got it.

How about punching a Pilates classes? They're

Feel like going for a swim? After all, the Young Men's Christian Association and swimming have always been synonymous.

The men's and women's locker rooms adjoining the pool have saunas.

In addition, there's a splash pool for young children who aren't ready for the big pool yet. A plastic hydrant shoots up water so children can have fun in a

People of all ages can find something to do here. The Active Living Center for Older Adults, on the bottom floor, is not quite finished. Alex Turek, executive director of the Andover/North Andover YMCA, said he expects this area to open by the end of this month.

The equipment on this floor is tailored for the older man or woman, who desires a "conservative" workout and might not feel comfortable exercising with younger folks who are striving to bench press 300 or 400 or 500 pounds or more, or who want to get their running time per mile down to 5 minutes or less — or both goals.

The center will include a lounge area where members can relax, have a cup of coffee and socialize a bit before or after working out, Turek

The octagon is equipped with a heavy bag, TRX suspension training equipment and dip bars, among other features. Turek and Kapelson said the local facility is the only Y in New England with an octagon. Vishvesh Kaul, 17, an Andover High School junior and running back on the football team, was hard at work Tuesday afternoon on an upper body workout.

"It's probably the best gym in this area," he said. He likes being able to combine cardio work with strength training, he said.

Kaul wants to put on a few pounds of muscle and at the same time burn off some fat — not that he has much of that on his frame.

Kids asthma rates trending down, study shows

By Lindsey Tanner AP Medical Writer

CHICAGO — Asthma rates in U.S. children have quieted down after a decades-long increase, a government study found, and researchers are trying to pinpoint reasons that would explain the trend.

A possible plateau in childhood obesity rates and declines in air pollution are among factors that may have helped lower cases in kids, the 2001-13 study suggests. Overall, average asthma rates among kids aged 17 and younger increased slightly, then leveled off and declined by the study's end, when 8.3 percent of kids were affected. Rates varied among some regions, races and ages.

The study was published online this January in the journal Pediatrics (pediatrics.org).

NUANCED TRENDS

Childhood asthma rates doubled from 1980 to 1995, partly because of more awareness and diagnosis. The new study shows slower increases after that, rising to 9.3 by 2010. Declines in the most recent years were in children younger than 5, Mexican kids, those in the Midwest and those from families that weren't poor. Rates plateaued among whites and those living in the Northeast and West, but increased in those aged 10 to 17, kids from poor families and those living in the South.

Rates increased but then plateaued among blacks.

The study is based on annual in-person government health surveys in which parents of more than 150,000 kids were asked if their children had been diagnosed with asthma.

Data not included in the study show 2014 rates climbed slightly to 8.6 percent but it's not clear if that change was real, said lead author Dr. Lara Akinbami, a medical officer at the government's National Center for Health Statistics.

Local leaders issue call to action A large banner and several national flags hang outside the Andover Baptist Church during the church's Martin Luther King Day celebration on Monday.

By Zoe Mathews

Residents, politicians, and religious leaders of the Merrimack Valley gathered Monday to celebrate Martin Luther King Jr. Day. Through speeches, music, and prayer, leaders spoke of the Reverend's legacy as a civil rights activist, and acknowledged that his dream has not been accomplished just yet.

At the Andover Baptist Church, town leaders and state elected officials were among the nearly 200 residents, choir singers, and performers for the annual Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration and Luncheon.

Keynote speaker Rabbi Howard Mandell of Congregation Beth Israel said that coming together as a community is only the first step.

"How do we help his dream be achieved?" he asked during his keynote speech. "It's by how we live our lives every day.

Mandell became a rabbi after two decades of service as a constitutional and civil rights lawyer in Montgomery, Alabama. There, he started the state's first racially integrated law firm.

upwards of 250 people broke bread together, and public leaders spoke of challenges yet to be overcome at the annual Merrimack Valley Branch NAACP Martin Luther King Jr. Breakfast.

Lawrence Mayor Dan Rivera spoke of the significance of youth. King was 34 when he delivered his famed "I Have a Dream" speech in front of the Lincoln Memorial on Aug. 28, 1963, and he was 39 when he was gunned down in Memphis, Tenn., on April Keynote speakers at both events acknowledged that today's youth are the key to making a better reality for tomorrow.

Rabbi Mandell noted that King was only 26 during the Montgomery Bus Boycott, a man who just that year had received his doctoral degree from Boston University, still filled with self-doubt. Mandell himself was only 23, and found a role model in King.

"What makes King so remarkable is that he's human," Mandell said, his voice filling the Andover Baptist Church, "just like everyone here. And he learned how to overcome his fears."

As leaders paid tribute to King, they also acknowledged that his legacy is continued in the ongoing struggle for equality.

"Elect we must, leadership we can trust," said Lisa Riddick, president of the Merrimack Valley NAACP Branch.

That was the call to action of the NAACP in 1982, and it was Riddick's call to action yesterday, when she urged people to go out and vote to ensure progress continues.

Congresswoman Niki RYAN HUTTON/Staff photo Tsongas also spoke at the icates of congressional recognition to Lisa Riddick and Joseph Devoe Jr. She urged people not to accept the "tranquilizing drug of gradualism," as King said himself, and to resist complacency.

At the Andover Baptist Church, Rabbi Mandell also made political statements, likening some Republican candidates for president to George Wallace, governor of Alabama from 1963 to 1967. Wallace was known for supporting segregation, and said during his inaugural speech, "segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever."

Mandell closed his keynote speech by having the audience stand, hold hands, and sing "We Shall Overcome," just as Martin Luther King tice," said De La Cruz. "The what King's vision was for Jr. had done so many times before.

New director for TIP as founder moves on

Kristin Kowalski to head up Andover-based Trauma Intervention Program

By Judy Wakefield jwakefield@andovertownsman.com

As Lawrence General Hospital's emergency room staffers awaited the ambulances from the recent explosion at Dow Chemical in North Andover they made a call to TIP (Trauma Intervention Program) based in Andover and asked for the trauma team experts to come to the hospital and assist with the injured patients.

"Two of our volunteers went to assist," said Kristin (Monahan) Kowalski of Andover. "We are very well respected in this area and get calls like that from hospitals or police departments responding to trauma incidents regularly...we are trained to help at these incidents."

Kowalski, who is married to Andover Selectman Dan Kowalski, has certainly jumped right in as she is the just-named new director of TIP. She has been at TIP's top job for about a month.

Kowalski replaces Dr. Jayan Landry, who cofounded the first east coast TIP — headquartered in Andover — in October 1993.

Andy Menezes, 55, has been a ubiquitous volunteer on the conservation front in Andover.

He's a digger: digging for information, walking properties and ferreting out land parcels, all to benefit the town's out-of-doors resources.

It's not glamorous but it's diligent work that pays dividends, says Bob Douglas, director of the town's Conservation Division.

For instance, not long ago he identified a parcel in town owned by the MBTA. It was an abandoned piece that, if donated, would make a nice addition to the town's conservation holdings because of its proximity to other conservation lands and the Shawsheen River.

"He is very adept at going through our conservation records and identifying land we own and others that need further research at the registry," Douglas said.

This behind-the-scenes work is essential what with the inevitable log-jams of deed-related paperwork that arise with the 2,000 acres of property under the Conserva- Trails Committee. tion Commission's care.

Menezes is also fearless about walking property regardless of the season,

You might see him walking across the frozen Shawsheen River in the middle of winter, moving at a relaxed pace to match his personality, though maybe no hint in his gait of his good but subtle sense of Local conservationist Al French knows Menezes in two capacities.

One, as a Conservation Commission volunteer, and, more recently, as a volunteer director of the Andover

'Andy is an information technology professional and business consultant, and, for as long as I have known him," French said, "Andy has attended virtually all Con-Com meetings as an unpaid volunteer to provide audio visual and computer help - greatly improving the efficiency, their efficiency.'

REPORTER - The Salem News, Beverly, MA

AT AT 20160121 C

Part-time. We're looking for an energetic, enthusiastic self-starter who is comfortable working in multiple types of media; reporting and writing stories; shooting simple photos and videos to accompany their work when appropriate; and immersed in the networks of social media. You should be nimble and able to tailor your approach to stories to satisfy audiences viewing your work in print, on a desktop browser, mobile device or tablet. Candidates should be organized and tenacious and have a passion for journalism in the digital age. You'll be expected to develop sources, generate story ideas and break news. This is a 20 hour per week position. Ideal candidates should have a bachelor's degree in journalism or a related field, but we really want to know what you're able to do in a modern newsroom. Three years' experience writing for a daily publication required. Candidates must have a valid driver's license with a good driving record, reliable transportation and current auto insurance. Please include clips when emailing your
